The Ring My Mother Wore,

The earth has many treasures rare. In gems and golden ore, My heart had one more precious far-The ring my mother wore, I saw it first, when I a child, Was playing by her side. She told me then 'twas father's gift When she became his bride,

I saw it oft in sorrow's hours, Which marked the after years, When shining on the soft white hand That wiped away my tears. And, oh! I saw it once again, When on her dying bed, She lifted up her hands in prayer, And laid it on my head.

Beside that bed, where fell my tears, The ring to me was given, She placed it on my hand, and said: " We'll meet again in Heaven!" I kissed the cheek I oft had pressed, From which the rose had fled. And, bowed with grief, stood motherless, Alone, beside the dead.

Among the blest in realms above, Where sorrows are unknown. Oh may I meet my mother dear, No more to weep a one. Her dying words of love and faith I'll cherish evermore Within the heart which holds so dear The ring my mother wore,

As the crowd of spectators increased day by day, and the picture became better known, some doubtful criticisms were heard. The English especially looked at David with unfavorable eyes. It was whispered he was a rebel, a man given to bold speech, a stirrer up of seditions. and that the picture had a sacred mean ing, which began to be heavily fe.t by those subjects of King George who were already afflicted with dissatisfied minds.

It was remembered afterward that, among the more distinguished visitor there came one day a gentleman with a proud, handsome, discontented face. He had a military bearing, and was accompanied by a most delicate and lovely lady. He knew everybody of the better class, and was everywhere greeted.
