With Lights Turned Low.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

To invite guests to a festive occasion and then receive them in a house all in disorder and with the lights turned low would be an inconceivably rude thing, wouldn't it?

You cannot imagine anyone doing it.

And yet, not long ago, I was one of the guests at a little anniversary celebration at which our hosts gave us an even more depressing (to me at least) reception than that.

The lights were bright enough and the house was immaculate (as always) and yet the whole home was filled with an atmosphere of gloom. They couldn't wait till their guests were gone.

For our host and hostess had fallen out over some matter and hadn't the self control and courtesy to put their quarrel behind them until the guests were gone.

Their animosity towards each other dominated the whole occasion. All our attempts at cheerful and sprightly conversation fell utterly flat. All our efforts to impart an air of festivity to the affair were paralyzed by the noxious gas of their animosity.

And yet we had a miserable time. There were always all about the house, there was music, there were bright lights, there were delicious things to eat, which our hosts had doubtless labored all day, and all the conventional factors of a good time except the all important factor, a pleasant atmosphere.

"The ornaments of a house" someone is said, "are its friends."

ANOTHER AIR RAID ON ENGLAND

LONDON, July 4.
From twelve to fourteen air raiders to-day dropped bombs on Harwich, a seaport town in Essex. It was officially announced to-night that eight persons were killed and 22 others injured. The text of the official statement reads: "A squadron of some twelve to fourteen enemy airplanes attacked Harwich from a northeasterly direction about 7.50 o'clock this morning. A number of bombs were dropped, and latest reports state that eight persons were killed and twenty-two injured. Only slight material damages were caused. Fire was opened from the anti-aircraft defences and the enemy's formation was broken up, although the low-lying clouds rendered the visibility very bad. The raiders also were engaged by our own aircraft from a neighboring station. After dropping three bombs the enemy's squadron turned seaward without attempting to penetrate inland. The whole raid only occupied a few minutes."

There was lively fighting between British and German airplanes during the attacks on Harwich this morning, and only about five minutes elapsed before the defensive aircraft and anti-aircraft guns drove off the invaders. According to late despatches it was a misty morning, but the German machines could be distinguished at intervals when they appeared from behind cloud banks. The Germans travelled at great speed and in close formation, heading first one way then another in an erratic manner. Bombs were dropped in rapid ately took the initiative, and operation. British airmen immediately under the most adverse conditions intercepted the Germans and broke up their formation. Frustrated in their enterprise the Germans turned towards the sea. Their retreat was marked by a series of duels with the British aviators. One British machine was seen to engage two Germans. Anti-aircraft guns are believed to have registered some hits, although the clouds prevented the gunners from getting a clear view of their targets. Two of the German machines that took part in the air raid at Harwich were brought down by British naval aircraft and a third machine was damaged, it is officially announced. All the British airmen who engaged the Germans emerged safely from their fighting. The official statement announced the result as follows: "The Vice-Admiral at Dover reports that naval aircraft from Dunkirk intercepted the hostile squadron returning from England after their attack on Harwich this morning. In an engagement a considerable distance from the Belgian coast two hostile machines were brought down in flames, while a third was damaged. Several other machines were attacked with indecisive results. All our machines returned safely."

A late report of the air raid shows casualties increased to 11 killed and 36 injured.

LONDON, July 4.

WEEKLY SHIPPING REPORT.
LONDON, July 4.
The weekly shipping summary, issued to-day, shows fifteen British merchant ships of more than 1,600 tons sunk, and five less than this tonnage, eleven fishing vessels were lost. The forecast that the summary of British shipping losses by submarines and mines covering last week would show the smallest number of sinkings in many weeks, were verified by the actual figures. The total of twenty merchant ships sunk compares with 25 the previous week and 32 for each of the two weeks preceding. A probable heavy falling off of tonnage sent to the bottom is emphasized by the fact that only 15 vessels of more than 1,600 tons are now reported sunk. The sinking of 21 vessels in this class was announced last week, 27 the week previous and 22 the week before that. It is not until the report for June 3rd is reached that figures as low as those for the current week are encountered. In the height of the destructive campaign in April 46 large vessels were sunk two weeks, and 33 another. The total of large ships sunk reached 55 in the week ending April 21st.

DETROIT ASKED TO ADOPT SOISSONS.
WASHINGTON, July 4.
Detroit is to be asked to adopt the French town of Soissons, which has been subject to so many sieges during the war, and restore it. The French Minister of Fine Arts and his associates on the committee of the French Restoration Fund, telegraphed to James Keating, their American representative, suggesting he ask Detroit to adopt Soissons. Keating left Washington to-day for Detroit to make the request. "We are at Soissons," the messages said, "and have just completed a survey of the devastation. Soissons must be adopted at once. There are forty communes dependent upon Soissons that have been absolutely destroyed. The people have neither home, church nor school." Soissons had 20,000 inhabitants at the outbreak of the war.
