Trade Loyalty to Great Britain.

"Inasmuch as Great Britain admits the products of Canada into her ports free of duty, this House is of the opinion that the present scale of duties exacted on goods mainly imported from Great Britain should be

The above resolution was proposed in the House of Commons at Ottawa by Hon. L. H. Davies, and supported by every Liberal in the House. It was voted down, at the bidding of the men in power, by the unanimous vote of the Conservatives in the

They Injure Canada.

Five years ago on the eve of the last general elections. Sir Charles Tupper came over from his High Commissioner's office in London to take an active part in the elections. He was on that occasion the Government's fight hand man as stump speaker, and taking the cue from his leader he made a fierce attack upon the loyalty of the Liberal party in this country. The cry was re-echoed by every high tax campaigner from the Atlantic to the Paci-ed every Conservative newspaper filled its columns with diatribes of the same kind. The attack served its purpose on that occasion, to the extent that the Government secured a small majority of the members, though not a majority of the votes cast. If the charge was true, it meant that a majority of the electors were disloyal, and were ready to hand their country over to the Government of the United States. But from that time until now the loyalty howlers have been silent, though it might be supposed that if there was good cause for their accusation, steps would have been taken to punish in some way the more active traitons. We are again on the eve of eneral elections; again Sir Charles Tupper has deserted his post in London to take an active part in Canadian politics, and again the high tax party is beginning to shout disloyalty at the Liberals.

It is a most discreditable exhibition, and only worthy of the followers of the party's new leader. When one considers how the Government was broken into factions two weeks ago, at a time when the news of a declaration of war against Great Britain by the leading nations of Europe was looked for in every daily paper, how half the Cabinet went out on strike and the business of the country was at a standstill, one wonders how any one of them can be heard on the question of any man's or any party's disloyalty. The matter is too serious at the present time to be passed over without remonstrance, and if we had the ear of the Queen's representative in Canada we would suggest to him that this is an occasion when he might very fittingly give his advisers some wholesome advice. It does not lie with Ministers who only a few days ago were discribed by the Premier as "a nest of traitors" to either make or countenance a railing accusation of disloyalty against a political party which there is very good reason to believe represents a large majority of the people of Canada.

Mr. Laurier and the Volunteers.

The Montreal Gazette, chief Conservative organ in Quebec Province,

avs:

"One of the clauses in the speech from the throne to which Mr. Laurier objected was that referring to the arms of the militia, which the Government proposes to improve. It would look as if the Opposition, at the coming election, proposed to get along without the volunteer vote."

It is only necessary to print the report of Mr. Laurier's reference to the volunteers, as given in the official report of the debate to show how dispicable are the tactics of the high tax organs now that Mr. Laurier is carrying everything before him in the constituencies. This is what Mr. Laurier said:

"If we are to spend money on our militia and our volunteer force, and we must do so, common sense requires that this money, to be efficiently spent should be spent in such a manner as to provide them with the best armament that can be obtained, according to the progress of the age. What is the object of our militia force? Why, sir, the thing is obvious. The object of arming the militia of the volunteer force is this, that should we, in the grave contingency of war, be called upon at any moment to defend our country, we may have a force ready to meet the enemy or to repel invasion; and if our militia or volunteers are to meet the enemy at any moment, which God forbid, then it would be simply sending them to butchery if we forced them to go without equipping them with an arm equal to that in the hands of the enemy. I quite agree with the honorable member for North Ontario that the best armament, the best defense for Canada, is to put good and sound weapons into the hands of the soldiers of Canada."

the hands of the soldiers of Canada."

Assuredly a cause that requires the persistent misrepresentation and vilification of a statesman of Mr. Laurier's stainless record is a poor one, and worthy of that condemnation which has recently been extended to it in Winnipes, Cardwell, Montreal Center, Seconds Cartier and West Huron

The End of the Storm.
To the Editor of the "Advertiser":

We may hope from the language of the British press that the dispute between Great Britain and America about the Venezuelan question is at an end, and that friendly relations have been restored. The Standard, which is the organ of the extreme Tory and Imperialist party, says that it is pleased at the exchanges of diplomatic expressions of good will between the United States and Great Britain, and that a way must be found to reconcile England in view of her rights in Guiana with the sensibilities of the people of the United States, adding that a satisfactory settlement must be only a work of time, and suggesting a direct agreement with Venezuela as a solution in which England will have the good will of the United States. Other British journals express themselves in the same way. The commissioners appointed by President Cleveland are men of the highest character, and may be trusted to find a true verdict. Two of them are personally known to me, and I would warrant their competence and integrity. While I do not pretend to understand the Venezuelan boundary question, I have confidence enough in the British Colonial Office to anticipate that the decision will be in favor of the British claims.

Great Britain is apparently willing to recognize the Monroe doctrine, while she denies its applicability to the Venezuelan question. She would recognize it, of course, not in the extravagant form which it sometimes assumes in Fourth of July orations, but in the form in which it was originated by Canning, and promulgated by Monroe. So understood, it involves no menace of American aggrandizement; it is nothing more than the new world's charter of freedom from the old world's interference. Canning not only originated, but himself applied it. It was his boast that he had called the new world into existence to redress the balance of the old. In other words, he had interposed between Spain and her insurgent colonies in South America, though assuredly he had no more jurisdiction in that quarter than has the President of the United States.

United States.

In the appeal of a weak State like Venezuela to the good offices of a powerful State like the American Republic, there is nothing contrary to international law, to European analogy, or to the practice of England herself in the many cases that might be cited of her diplomatic intervention.

Canada is not affected by the Monroe doctrine, from the purview of which dependencies of European powers already in existence are expressly excepted by Monroe. There was, therefore, no need of any paroxysm of wrathful excitement so far as the Dominion was concerned. Had our jingoes been aware of this, they might have been spared the unseemliness, or perhaps we should rather say they would have missed the pleasure, of denouncing as traitors and felons people not less honorable, or less loyal to the public interest than themselves.

Once more we have seen the strange contrast between the desire of the people in the mother country to preserve kindly relations with her American kinsmen and the virulent hatred of everything American which is cultivated by jingoes here. Yet among all our jingoes it may be doubted whether there is one who, if offered a good salary at New York or Chicago, would not leave the Old Flag and cross the line. If the temper which these men strive to foster could prevail, there would be slaughter and havoc in Canadian homes. As it is, they bring dearth into Canadian homes by keeping up the spirit of antagonism which shows itself in hostile tarriffs, and is now threatening to show itself in the exclusion of Canadian labor.

Loyalty, even when misdirected, as it was in adherence to the Stuarts, is a generous sentiment, and must command our respect. But of this affected hatred and contempt of Americans a great part is snobbishness and nothing else. The snob fancies that by parading his superiority to Yankees he can make himself aristocratic and genteel.

In the course of this controversy some of us have had the honor to be the objects not only of jingo abuse and misrepresentation, but of jingo threats. I happened once to look in upon John Bright just as he finished reading an article by some British jingo threatening to hang him for treason to his country in opposing a war. "A man might come to a worse end than that," was Bright's quiet remark, as he laid the paper down. The war which he had been opposing was one undertaken to uphold the dominion of Turkey over the Armenians and the other Christian races beneath her sway. Yours faithfully,

GOLDWIN SMITH.

In a recent interview on the condition of the iron trade in the United States Andrew Carnegie expressed the opinion that the railway system of that country is now practically developed. There are more rail mills he said, than will ever be employed again on rails, for it is not possible, that railway canstruction can go on at the rate of 13,000 miles a year. The result must be therefore that rail mills will have to adapt themselves to other purposes besides rails. The requirements of this year, Mr. Carnegie believes, will be greater than it has been for two or three years past, but it will not be surcient to keep all the mills busy upon ails

The Montreal Star thus hits off the situation at the capital: "Ananias is dead. Saphira is dead. Munchausen (if he ever existed) is dead. But the Government at Ottawa still lives."

A Montreal dispatch amounces that twelve soup kitchens are being run for the benefit of the unemployed in that city. The Provincial Legislature has been applied to for assistance. No wonder the electors of Montreal Center recently voted "no confidence" in the high tax policy as an alleged agency for providing plenty of work at good

A noteworthy sign of the times is chronicled by the Montreal Commercial Gazette. The Canadian demand for woolen goods fell off enormously last year, the production of the woolen mills of the country decreased nearly 20 per cent, while the value of the foreign, duty paying, goods imported was less by nearly $3,000,000. This is interpreted by our commercial contemporary to mean that the working classes have been obliged, owing to general depression, to buy woolens sparingly and to clothe themselves with the cheaper cotton manufactures. 11 11 11

The United States national debt has been reduced over 1,880 millions of dollars since the close of the war in 1865. But for the taxaation necessitated by that war, what an enviable position the taxpayers of the United States would have been in by this time!

Gomez, the wonderful Cuban insurgen gentral, is 60 years of age, alert, cool, calculating and intrepid. The love of freedom must have an invigorating effect to keep a man at the time of life which Gomez has reached in the best of health and unimpaired energy.

Sir Charles Tupper, junior, must have been hard beset in the House of Commons on Friday night when he took to misrepresenting the actions of the anceston of Sir Richard Cartwright, who came to Canada as a U. E. Loyalist at the end of last century. But the resort to perversion of history, 100 years old, was probably an easier task than would have been the meeting of the arguments of Sir Richard.

Great Britain exported wool and woolen goods last year to the value of over $55,000,000 against an average of $25,000,000 in the years from 1891 to 1894. This and other equally convincing facts may not prevent the Canadian high tax advocate from running down the motherland, but they are none the less convincing proofs of Britain's progress.

There are 500 Chinamen in Montreal, and it is said their numbers are increasing.

In 1865 not a single town in India had a supply of pure water; now nearly all the large cities and cantonments have waterworks, with the result that the death rate among the British troops of 60 per 1,000 thirty years ago has been reduced to 15 per 1,000. British ideas of progress have been of immense advantage to India. A knowledge of this reconciles the countless thousands of the people of that wonderful land to British rule.

The London Times notes as a curious fact that about fifteen years ago, when Alfred Austin was at Delphi, a Greek priest tore from a tree in full flower (the month was May) a branch of bay, and gave it to him. When Lord Tennyson died Mr. Austin sent this branch to Aldworth as a tribute, and its was placed on the coffin with Lady Tennyson's roses and a volume of Shakespeare. Now let the new poet laureate write a poem in honor of the Greek parson, the green bay tree, and the good luck they brought him.

A STINGING REBUKE.

Would it not be better for the salvation of man—far better for the conquest of religion—instead of sending missionaries into the far east, into the jungle of Africa, into the Dark Continent, spending millions of dollars, sacrificing precious lives to teach the semi-savage and barbarians the lessons of Christian love—I say, would it not be better to send these very missionaries to the conflicting and hostile civilized Christian nations of Europe, demanding of them compliance with the injunction of that great Jew, Jesus, the founder of Christianity, "Love ye one another."—Rabbi Eisenberg, Hebrew, Peoria, Ill
