BUREAU OF MARKETS

U. S. Senator Proposes that Government Gather News of Produce Markets.

[Canadian Press.]
Washington, April 11. — The committee selected in Chicago yesterday to urge upon President Wilson the establishment of a federal bureau of markets, is ordered to secure attention during the present session of Con-gress for bills now pending to create the proposed new division in the agricultural department. Senator Hoke Smith has again introduced the bill, which has twice passed the Senate, but which was finally lost last ses-sion, when a conference committee dropped it from the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Smith bill would create a permanent division for the gathering and distribution of produce market news, and the study of co-operative and commercial marketing methods. The start toward this end was made in the last Congress, when an appropriation of $50,000 was secured for the purposes named.

Then without a word or a glance he passed from the room. To Be Continued. LONDON CONFERENCE METHODIST CHURCH By Vaughan Kester Tuesday, June 10—8:45 a.m.—Devotional exercises, conducted by Dr.

"How is Jack bearing it?" she asked. Her question seemed to depress Gilmore.
"Why do you care about how he takes it? I don't suppose he sees any fun in it—he didn't look to me as if he did," he said slowly.

"But how did he seem to you?"
"Oh, he's got nerve enough, if that's

"Oh, he's got nerve enough, if that's what you mean!"

"Poor Jack!" she murmured softly.

"If you're curious, why don't you go to take a look at poor Jack? He'll be there all right for the next few weeks," said the gambler, watching her narrowly.

"I'm afraid Marsh might object."

At this Gilmore threw back his head and laughed.

"Excuse me!" he said; and in explanation of his sudden mirth, he added: "The dea of your trotting out Marsh to me!"

"I'm not trotting him out to you—as you call it." Evelyn said quietly, but her small foot tapped the floor. She intended presently to rid herself of Gilmore for all time.

"Yes, but I was afraid you were going "You mustn't speak to me as you do; I have done nothing to give you the Gilmore did not seem at all abashed

Gilmore did not seem at all abashed at this reproof.

"If you want to go to the trial I'll take you, and I'll agree to make it all right with Marsh afterward. What do you say?" he asked.

Evelyn smiled brightly, but she did not explain to him the utter impossibility of their appearing in public together either at the North trial or anywhere else for the matter of that; there were bounds set even to her reckless disregard of what Mount Hope held to be right and proper. "Oh, no! You're very kind, but I don't think I should care to see poor Jack now." think I should care to see poor Jack now. She gave a little shiver of horror as if at the mere idea. This was for the gambler, but her real feeling was far deeper than he, suspicious as he was,

would possibly know.
"Why do you 'poor Jack' him to me?"
sked Gilmore sullenly.
Evelyn opened her fine eyes in appar-

t astonishment.
"He is one of my oldest friends.

"Yes-perhaps-" answered Evelyn sently. "Look here, I don't want to talk to you about North, anyhow. Can't we hit on some other topic?" asked Gilmore. It maddened him even to think of the part the accused man had played in her life.

"Why have you and Marsh turned against him?" she asked.

The gambler considered for an instant.
"Do you really want to know? Well, you see, he wasn't square; that does a man up quicker than anything else."

"I don't believe it!" she cried.
"It's somest Marsh, we found him to bered that Marsh had once boasted of having proof that she was in North's rooms the afternoon of the murder, and it flashed across her mind that if anyone really knew of her presence there it was Gilmore himself. She studied him furtively, and she observed that his black waxed moustache shaded a pair of lips that wore a mirthless smile, and what had at first been no more than an undefined suspicion grew into a certainty. Gilmore shifted uneasily in his chair. He felt that since their last meeting he had ost ground with her.

"What's the matter—why do you keep me at arm's length; what have I done, anyhow?" he asked impatiently.

"Do I keep you at arm's length? Well, perhaps you need to be kept there," she said. "You should know what brings me re—why it is I can't keep away."

"How should I know, unless you tell e?" she said softly. Gilmore bent toward her, his eyes lustrous with suppressed feeling.
"Isn't that another of your little jokes. Evelyn? Do you really want me to tell

"I am dying with curiosity."
"Voice and manner seemed to encourage, and the gambler felt his heart leap within him. "Well, guess it's principally to see you!" he muttered, but his lips quivered

"Just see how mistaken one may be, Andy; I thought all along it was Marsh!" At her use of his Christian name his heavy face became radiant. His purposes were usually allied to an admirable directness of speech that never left one long in doubt as to his full meaning.

"Look here, aren't you about sick of Marsh?" he asked. "How long are you going to stand for this sort of thing? You have a right to expect something better than he has to offer you."

The Prodigal Judge

than he has to offer you."

She met the glance of his burning black eyes with undisturbed serenity, but a cruel smile had come again to the corners cruel smile had come again to the corners of her mouth. She was preparing to settle her score with Gilmore in a fashion he would not soon forget. One of her hands rested on the arm of her chair, and the gambler's ringed fingers closed about it; but apparently she was unaware of this; at least, she did not seek to withdraw it. "By Jove, you're pretty!" he cried. "What do you mean?" she asked quietly."

"Mean-don't you know that I love you? Have I got to make it plain that I eare for you-that you are everything to he asked, bending toward her. "So you care a great deal about me, do you, Andy?" she asked slowly. "I like to hear you call me that!" he

"I like to hear you call me that!" he said with a deep breath.
"What is it, Andy—what do you want?" she continued.
"You—you!" he said hoarsely; his face was white, he had come to the end of long days of hope and doubt; he had battered down every obstacle that stood in his path and he was telling her of his love, nor did she seem unwilling to hear him. "You are the whole thing to me! I have loved you always—ever since I have loved you always-ever since first saw you! Tell me you'll quit this place with me—I swear I'll make you

His face was very close to hers, and, guessing his purpose, she snatched away her hand. Then she laughed.

As the sound of her merriment fell on ilmore's startled ears, there swiftly came him the consciousness that something was wrong. "You and your love-making are very ave known him all my life," she said.

"Well, one's friends should keep out of you don't seem to understand. There is such a thing as taste in selection, even left," observed Gilmore in surly tones.

When it has ceased to be a matter of the surly tones. when it has ceased to be a matter of morals. I don't like you, Mr. Gilmore. You amused me, but you are merely tire-

She spoke with deliberate contempt, and his face turned white and then scarlet, as if under the sting of a lash. "If you were a man—" he began infuriated by the insolence of her speech "If I were a man I should be quite abl to take care of myself. Understand, am seeing you for the last time."

"Yes, by — you are!"
His face was ashen He had come to his feet, shaken and uncertain. It was as if each word of hers had been a stab. man up quicker than anything else.

"I don't believe it!" she cried.

"It's so—ask Marsh; we found him to be an all-right crook; then's when we quit him," he said, nodding and smiling grimly.

There was something in his manner which warned her that his real meaning which warned her that his real meaning irresolutely. His first feeling of furious rage was now tempered by a sense of p.m. rage was now tempered by a sense of coming loss. This was to be the end; he was never to see her again!
