Mr. Chisholm was the first speaker. In the course of his remarks, referring to the Pacific railway bargain, he said he was a member of the second syndicate, and he repudiated indignantly the assertion that it was a bogus affair ; if they had been awarded the contract at three million dollars less and three million acres less than had been given to the other syndicate, they would have done the work and made money out creditably represent any constituency. He pointed out that Sir John Macdonald and the conservative newspapers had during the past year endeavored to create a false impression among the people as to the elections; the conservative convention of last fall was intended to throw the people off their guard, so that the government might spring the elections on them suddenly. And this was what was done. The conservatives brought on the elections a y ahead of time, because they said, as they h said in 1878. that great amounts of capital were awaiting investment. They had predicted that new factories would spring up in every town and village, that tall chim neys would arise at every cross road; but these predictions had not been fulfilled, and the country was going on in the usual way. The fact was the government brought on the elections because they were getting afraid, and an evidence of their fear was that they gerrymandered over fifty of the constituencies of Ontario Would any man with a spark of honor in him hesitate to condemn so vile and dishonorable a trick, which tended to demoralize public sentiment and to debaueh the politics of the country. [Cheers.] He touched upon the Pacific railway contract and the boundary question, which he declared were of more moment to us than the national policy. The liberal party had always been the party in favor of the maintenance of provincial rights, and their principles were always the same. [Cheers.] If returned on the 20th of June he would enjoy no feeling of pride greater than to declare his fealty to the leader of the liberal party, Edward Blake, [Loud cheers.] He believed, from the feeling manifested throughout the country, he believed it was the settled conviction, not only among their friends, but among uld carry the county. [Cheers.]

Mr. Blake, on coming forward to speak, was enthusiastically cheered. After some preliminary remarks, he said the government had precipitated the elections a year ahead of time because they felt that the tide was turning, that delays were dangerous, and that their only hope was to try and snatch a verdict by surprise. [Cheers.] He thought they were entitled to call, not only on men of liberal views, but on all honest men who respected the fourdation on which our constitution rests, to protest against the way in which the government had dealt with this election. [Hear, hear.] They had not dared to face the people who had returned them before; but they had made their preparations by gerrymandering the constituencies, with only one object, to strengthen themselves and weaken their opponents, which they had done in twenty-eight ridings in Ontario. [Hear, hear and cheers]. But he rejoiced to be able to tell them that the spirit of liberals and fairminded men everywhere had been aroused by this and other acts to a degree which boded to them a high measure by success. [Cheers.] Now, he asked how far the gov-

The meeting was unexceptionable in point of order and good behavior, and exhibited a spirit of appreciativeness and enthusiasm which must have been very gratifying both to Mr. Blake and to the leaders of the liberal cause in the county of Peel.

Mr. Thomas Milner, the president of the Mr. Thomas Milner, the president of the reform association of the county, took the chair, and he was surrounded on the platform by Messrs. James Fleming, the liberal candidate, K. Chisholm, M.P.P., E. Taylor, P. Cochesca, R. H. Hodger, H. P. Mil. rolling up year after year. In 1878, the year before this government entered office, the expenditure was $23,500,000; in 1881 it was $25,500,000; in 1882, according to the estimates, it will be nearly $28,000,000; and in 1883 it will be nearly $28,000,000; and in 1883 it will be nearly $30,000,000. [Hear, hear.] With regard, therefore, both to taxation and expenditure, there had been a violation of pledges on the part of the government. But, they said, the people do not feel the taxes, and it is much easier for them to pay the heavy taxes now than it was to pay the lighter taxes imposed by the Mackenzie government.

taxes imposed by the Mackenzie government. Well, he supposed most of us would feel better with our taxes in our pockets than in the treasury at Ottawa. [Cheers] and laughter.] The sources of prosperity.

These gentlemen claimed to have given us prosperity, and they appealed vaguely to then came torward. He is a young man, not having before been a candidate for parliamentary honors; he is a barrister of Brampton, a good speaker, is evidently well to the political questions of the posted on th

To whom was that due? He objected both to the quantity and to the quality of the taxes—he said we were bound to pay in taxes what was necessary to carry on the more. We could make better use of our money if we had it in our pockets than by paying it into the treasury at Ottawa. There were those who insisted on driving into their ears that the reform party would

They had always denied that; before the Mackenzie government, during its administration, and since it, we had a system which involved the taxation of a large variety of articles capable of being produced here. But it was said we could put the taxes on a few articles. He had not here all taxes on a few articles. He had not been able to see the way to do that equitably; but while we could not alter the system which had existed for so many years, we could find out what were the defects, the njustices, the inequalities in the tariff proanded by these men, and remove them. He did not believe in the taxes on coal or on breadstuffs. The tax was put on coal to force us in Oncario to burn Nova Scotia coal, but we did not burn it. The bread tax could be of no advantage to the farmers of Ontario because they control of Ontario because they exported a surplus, while it was an injury to the people of the lower provinces. As to the sugar tax, we were paying a heavy duty into the treasury and about half as much again to the refiners. He did not say that the refineries ought to be shut up, but he said that the price we were paying for the honor of having three or four efforcies in the ing three or four refineries in the country was entirely too much. He had proved on many platforms that the duties were in frequent instances so levied that the goods used by the poor were taxed nearly twice used by the poor were taxed nearly as heavily as the goods used by the rich. [Hear, hear.] Their opponents wished them to hand over this question to be settled by some men in England, who, they were told, would settle it better than the able and learned men who had made the award. That award having been made ought to have been respected by it better than the able and learned men who had made the award. That award having been made ought to have been respected by the dominion government and parliament. [Hear, hear and cheers.] The present government wanted this question settled outside of the country; but it need not go there to be settled; the people themselves could settle it at the ballot box on the 20th of June [loud cheers.] It depended on the complexion of the next parliament whether that award should be respected or not, and it depended on the people of Ontario what the complexion of the next parliament should be. A NOTE OF WARNING.

As he had shown, instead of keeping expenditure down, they were running it up to the level of an abnormal revenue; they were adding greatly to our burdens, but who would bear the burdens when the time of bad harvests and low accounts come and when the expheans were counts come, and when the exchequer was no longer so full? They themselves acknowledged that the surplus would not be so great, that some of the sources of revenue now producing it would dry up; but at the same time they acted as though they thought these sources would be permanent. It was for the people to decide these questions at the ballot. He rejoiced to learn the spirit of the electors of Peel, and he called upon them as they would be worthy of their privileges and equal to their responsibilities to denote themselves until the day of the election to the great work, having in view the restoration of good gov-ernment to the land they loved. [Loud and continued cheering.] After cheers for the queen, the candidate and Mr. Blake, the meeting closed.
