

number of people, sometimes reaching near two hundred. The child was at length found in the head of a hollow running from Walker's Mountain, and about one mile from home. It had sought a shelter under the side of a log, where, from appearances, it must have been the whole time—it had a bed of leaves; near it was a spring, where it had gone for water, which was the only sustenance the child could have had in all this time. The child knew its parents and exhibited no signs of fear, and we learn is doing well. How strangely has this child been preserved and kept in life? But for the supply of water it must have perished.—Wytheville Republican.
