Dear Sir:-

I am in receipt of your letter of January 19th with reference to a cure for cancer which you think you have.

If you want a chance to participate in the money prize, and I take it money is what you are after more than anything else, you must have your preparation certified as worthy of investigation by two reliable medical men. Then you must send it to the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, London, England, and leave yourself entirely in their hands.
Nobody is going to pay you to go to Toronto to demonstrate whether your preparation is good or bad;
much less is anyone going to pay you to go to London, England.

The attitude of your family is very difficult for me to understand, in view of the fact that 100,000 persons on this continent are dying each year from cancer.
You claim you have a cure which would save these 100,000 lives, and your family want you to be paid to go to Toronto to demonstrate it. Do not you owe anything yourself to Society?

Yours faithfully,

Principal.
