WHITE NOT GUILTY

Unnecessary Force Used In Arrest is Finding In Police Court

Judgment Given This Morning—His Honor Would Like to See Supreme Court Decision on Matters Involved—Other Cases

Magistrate Ritchie today gave his decision in the case of William White, arrested some weeks ago on the charge of being drunk, violently resisting the police, and also with assaulting a policeman. White, while being arrested, His Honor said that in his opinion the police used wanton and unnecessary violence in arresting White. The latter was found not guilty and was allowed to go.

In closing his judgment His Honor said that he would like to see a special case taken to the Supreme Court of Canada in order to secure a decision on the right of policemen to handcuff prisoners and also the use of the baton on a prisoner's head. His Honor strongly advised White to keep away from liquor in future and he would not be getting into any more trouble.

John W. Allen arrested some weeks ago on charge of obtaining money under false pretence was sentenced to serve six months in jail.

F. Robert Dodd, charged with soliciting subscriptions for the Canadian Courier and failing to make returns, pleaded not guilty and was remanded. He told the court that he had collected two subscriptions, one from J. V. Russell and one from D. W. Harper. The amount collected from both was $11.80. He said that he intended to make returns to the company, and did not in any way wish to defraud the company.

Isaac Anderson, charged with assaulting Captain Boston of the schooner Lewis Blackwood, was fined $20. He was allowed to go however, as arrangements are being made to have him deported to the United States.

Three other prisoners in jail on remand, were brought in and again remanded. They were all charged with drunkenness.

Reno R. Horne was fined $50 for not turning his horse to the right as he was practicable on the approach of a motor car in Waterloo street on Friday evening of last week. The complaint was made by T. P. Regan, president of the New Brunswick Automobile Association, acting on behalf of the association.

Mr. Regan told the court that he was driving down Waterloo street and that he was tooting the horn on his car Mr. Horne refused to turn to his right side of the road. Mr. Regan said that the full penalty is imposed as he wanted the drivers of vehicles to know that there was a law respecting the driving of teams in city streets and that the drivers must respect the law.

The fine was allowed to stand. Mr. Horne promised to drive on the proper side of the road in future.

His Honor again took occasion to tie the law in regard to motor vehicles. Two prisoners charged with drunkenness were fined $8 or two months in jail.

BIBLE MEN HAVE MANY STRANGE EXPERIENCES

Stories of Colporteurs of the British and Foreign Society

WHERE MONEY STARTS PANIC

A People Who Do Not Want To Look At It—Adventures With Wild Men and Beasts in Distributing the Scriptures

(Times Special Correspondence.)

London, Aug. 24.—Anybody who is bored with his hum-drum existence and yearns for a life of adventure can get it by becoming a "colporteur" for the Bible Society. This name, which is French for hawk or vendor, is the British and Foreign Bible Society, and apparently these "colporteurs," whose business is to distribute the Good Book, have as lively a time as the most reckless dare-devil could wish.

There are no actual casualties, it is true, in this year's record of their adventures in many corners of the globe, but a lot of life and death has been lived with wild men and beasts, and others have suffered hardships and come in for experiences which are as fantastic as novelist ever invented.

Brigands and blizzards, tigers and tempests, snakes and snow, have been their enemies. One would not expect to find the selling of Bibles resented in any part of Europe, yet a serious case of this kind is recorded where this, and no more, nearly cost a "colporteur" his life.

One of them tells how, near Vienna, he was "times without number" insulted and spat at, and once hung, with his catches into a ditch, by Social Democrats.

In Trent, in the Tyrol, another of these sales of Bibles was kidnapped and imprisoned in the back kitchen of a house where his Bibles were burnt before his eyes. His persecutors told him the cause would be meted out to him, and a "raging fanatic" was about to fall on him with an axe when the police burst in and rescued him. Many have dogs set on them, are pelted with stones and vegetables and find their work described in the papers as "spraying cancer among the people."

By a fanatical populace armed with rakes, sticks and stones, Carthage after ward had to protect the house where this kind of a few hours indifferent rest.

Like Arabian Nights

These things, however, are mere fleecies compared to the adventures that befall "colporteurs" in different parts of the world. One of them says that he has come straight out of the "Arabian Nights." In Persia, this Bible-dealer, whose name was Yusef, fell into the hands of a robber band and nothing but the appearance of a masterful telegraph official saved his life. He was taken to a prison and he out of this scrape than he was arrested in Kurdistan because he happened to bear the same name as an Armenian revolutionist.

"As the Lord liveth," he wrote to the society, "there was but a step between me and death." However, the police intervened, and the brother of the ex-Shah, into whose presence the man had been brought first, offered him a sum of money to desert, a post in his service, and, on his refusing it, gave him a title "Translator to the King," and his possession undoubtedly finds it pleasant to translate them to be stated for translation.

Money Not Welcome

In most parts of the world a stranger with plenty of the circulating medium for the purchase of goods, but a "colporteur" has discovered a tribe who are exceedingly shy of any money they may have about them. The people who harbor such remarkable antipathies are called the Zay, and they reside on the borders of Burma. The sight of gold or silver, particularly, throws them almost into a panic.

It seems that once a neighboring king had taken a fancy to the people, and that Zayain refused to point out the place, ordered the cutting off of the right hands of the people. Now the villagers shout neither gold nor silver and lead strangers kindly but firmly across the border.

Both seem to have let him alone, confining their attentions, perhaps, to his converse in the same line of business, one of whom told how he was "about to step on a deadly viper, concealed in the long grass," when a native's yell of warning saved his life, while another describes how he was treed by a leopard. He met this beast face to face, on the road to Akyah, and for a minute or two he was so paralyzed that he could do nothing but stare at it.

The leopard, too, hesitated a minute and then made for him and the colporteur sprinted for a tree and got up it. This seemed to surprise the leopard, which crouched down in the road and did not change its spot for four hours, during which the man in the tree lost several pounds. Then it "disappeared into the jungle," and the colporteur was left with a "very thankful," he says, and "very frightened." Another colporteur in South India had a narrow squeak with a tiger.

Lost in Blizzard

Two sellers of the Scriptures became lost in a Siberian blizzard and would have frozen to death had not the sound of a bell in the far distance told them of the direction safety lay. Others have had hair-breadth escapes in China.

In one village in that land a thief threw a poisoned cake into a compound to kill a watchful dog, and a child ate the cake and died, whereupon the luckless colporteur, who had been at the house that morning was pounced on. If the thief had not confessed it might have been all up with him.

Quite a novel in a nutshell, too, is the story of how a Bible-seller saved a Chinese city from attack by finding in his bed a letter which a brigand chief had sent by messenger to one of his lieutenants arranging that they should fall on the place at a certain time and planning to massacre the perfect, the foreigners and the police. The seller of Bibles warned the prefect who changed his garrison in a hurry and the attack was beaten off. Previously he had had no warning of danger and the number
