CONTROVERSY OF LAKE FISHERMEN

Matter Placed in Different Light by Report of Captain of United States Cutter

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The controversy which has been waged between the American and Canadian lake fishermen for the past twenty years has been placed in an entirely different light by a report made to the state department by Captain H. C. Chaytor, commanding the United States revenue cutter Morrill on the Great Lakes. The report shows in substance that the American fishermen have been transgressors and that they have been treated with the greatest consideration by the Canadian fishing patrol. Some time ago the state department considered favorably a plan of settling temporarily the vexed question of fishing rights on Lake Erie by placing a series of buoys in the middle of the lake to define the international boundary. The Canadian government cordially accepted this proposition and Captain Chaytor was instructed to place the buoys. As it was apprehended that honest differences of opinion as to the location of the boundary line might arise from differences between the automatic logs of the American and Canadian patrol vessels and the use of different charts, Captain Chaytor was instructed to compare notes on these points with the Canadian fishermen. He found that there were no differences and that the American fishermen were very lenient towards these fishermen, always giving them the benefit of any doubt as to location and for the past ten years he has observed the international boundary as indicated on United States charts. No Canadian fishermen poach on the American side of the line for the same reason—the fish are in Canadian waters. Captain Chaytor says these temporary buoys will be swept away by the ice next winter and should be replaced by permanent buoys lighted at night so as not to endanger navigation.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—Mrs. Jefferson Davis died of pneumonia at 10:25 o'clock tonight.

DOCTOR'S EVIDENCE SUPPORTS BROWER

Husband Charged With Killing His Wife Breaks Down and Sobs—Evidence Concluded

TOMS RIVER, N. J., Oct. 16.—When the court adjourned this afternoon at the trial of Dr. Frank L. Brower for the murder of his wife, Mrs. Brower's testimony was in and it only remained for counsel to sum up and the judge to deliver his charge. Each side will probably use two hours in the morning up tomorrow. Dr. E. McLane Forman in his testimony for the defense today said that there was not a single symptom in Mrs. Brower's case that could not be ascribed to ptomaine poisoning. Under cross-examination Dr. Forman admitted that on November 15, 1905, he signed an affidavit setting forth that the cause of Mrs. Brower's death was unknown. He explained by saying that he was not then positive as to what actually had caused the woman's death. He admitted that he had told Miss Lippincott and Miss Dudley, Brower, that they were talking about two of the nurses who attended Mrs. Brower, that they were talking about her too freely about the case and that their conduct was unprofessional and might do them harm. Dr. Forman denied that he had told any one that Mrs. Brower's death had been caused by Bright's disease. Dr. I. H. Hance of Lakewood was called by the defense and asked a hypothetical question, and gave it as his opinion that death was the result of ptomaine poisoning. Dr. George G. McMillen of Lakewood made a similar reply to this same question. The aged mother of the defendant took the witness stand. In the afternoon Dr. Brower broke down and sobbed for several minutes.

NEW I.C.R. ROUND HOUSE AT HALIFAX

HALIFAX, N. S., Oct. 16.—At a meeting of the Board of Trade today, J. C. MacKintosh, banker, announced that he had been informed that it was the intention of the I. C. R. to expend several hundred thousand dollars in the erection of a new round house and workshops at Halifax, the site for which had already been bonded.

INTEREST REVIVES IN THAW CASE

Intimated That Other Indictments May Follow—Thaw Worried for a Time

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—There was a revival of interest today in the case of Harry K. Thaw, charged with the murder of Stanford White, when in court District Attorney Jerome intimated that there might be other indictments in the case. The statement by the district attorney was made in the course of an argument before Recorder Goff against the writ of prohibition restraining the district attorney's office from further preliminary action in grand jury proceedings in the murder case. Under cross-examination Dr. Forman explained that Thaw had seen the evening papers and feared from what he had read of the proceedings that his wife, or other members of the family, might be indicted in the case. Mr. Hartbridge said that he merely called to set Thaw's mind at rest, as there was no danger that any other member of his family or any one connected with the family would be indicted. The recorder at the request of Mr. Jerome, adjourned the proceedings until that the district attorney might obtain a formal order to have the argument transferred to Justice McLean's court, where it was first heard.

MASTERS OF ARTS.

"You don't understand, Billy," said White with an uneasy laugh. "Some of us fellows who try to paint have big notions about Art. I wanted to paint a picture some day that people would stand before and forget that it was mere paint. I wanted it to creep into them like a bar of music and mushroom there like a soft breeze. And I wanted 'em to go away and ask, 'What else has he done?' And I didn't want 'em to find a thing; not a portrait nor a magazine cover nor an illustration nor a drawing of a girl—nothing but the picture. That's why I've lived on fried sausages, and tried to keep true to myself. I persuaded myself to do this portrait for the chance it might give me to study abroad. But this howling, screaming caricature! Good Lord! can't you see how it is?"
"Sure," said Keogh, "I can see it as clearly as you can. Get a lead and lead a long forefinger on White's knee. 'I see, it's had to have your art all slung up like that. I know. You wanted to paint a big thing like the panorama of the battle of Gettysburg. But let me kalamine you a little mental sketch to consider. Up to date we're out $385.50 on this scheme. Our capital cost every cent but about enough left to get back to New York on. I need my share of that ten thousand, I want to work a couple of days in Idaho, and make a hundred thousand. That's the business end of the thing. Come down off your pedestal, Carry, and let's land that hatful of dollars."
"Billy," said White, with an effort. "I'll try, I'll try, I'll do it, but I'll try. I'll go at it, and put it through if I can."
"That's business," said Keogh, heartily. "Good boy! Now, here's another thing—rush that picture—crowd it through as quick as you can. Get a couple of boys to help you mix the paint if necessary. I've picked up some pointers around town. The painter's beginning to get sick of Mr. President. They say he's been too free with concessions; and they accuse him of trying to make a deal with England and let the country go. We want that picture done and paid for before there's any row."
In the great patio of Casa Morena, the president caused to be stretched a huge canvas. Under this White worked each day the great man sat to him. White worked faithfully. But, as the day progressed, he had seasons of bitter scorn, of infinite self-contempt, of sullen gloom and sardonic gaiety. Keogh, with the patience of a general, soothed, coaxed, argued—kept him at the picture.
At the end of a month White announced that the picture was completed—Jupiter, Washington, angels, clouds, cannon and all. His mouth drawn straight when he told Keogh. He said the president was much pleased with the picture and he hung in the National Gallery of Statesmen and Heroes. The artist had been requested to return to Casa Morena on the following day to receive his money. At the appointed time he left the hotel, silent under his friend's joyful talk of the picture and the money.
An hour later he walked into the room where Keogh was waiting, threw his hat on the floor, and sat upon the table.
"Billy," he said, in strained and laboring tones, "I've a little money, but there isn't any. If you care to hear about it, here are the editing details. The president and I were looking at the picture. His secretary brought a man from New York for ten thousand dollars and handed it to me. The moment I touched it I went wild. I tore up the picture and threw them on the floor. A workman was repainting the pillars inside the patio. A bucket of blue paint all over the picture. I picked up the brush and slapped a quart of blue paint all over the picture. I bowed, and walked out. The president didn't move or speak. That was one time he was taken by surprise. It's tough on me, Billy, but I couldn't help it."
"There seemed to be excitement in Corallo. Outside there was a confused, rising murmur pierced by high-pitched cries. 'Bajo el traidor—Muerte el traidor!' were the words they seemed to form."
"Listen to that!" exclaimed White, bitterly. "I know that much Spanish. They're shouting, 'Down with the traitor!' I heard them when I felt that they meant me. I was a traitor! The picture had to go."
"Down with the traitor!" said Keogh, with fiery emphasis. "You tear up ten thousand dollars like an old rag because the way you've spread on five it hurts your conscience. Next time I pick a side-partner in a scheme the man has got to go before a notary and swear he never even heard the word 'ideal' mentioned. Keogh strode from the room, white-hot. White paid little attention to his resentment. The scorn of Billy Keogh's greater self-secure he had escaped.
In Corallo the excitement was about as follows: The cause of this demonstration of displeasure was the presence in the town of a big, pink, cheeked, and innocent-looking man, who was an agent of his government come to clinch the bargain by which the president placed his people in the hands of a foreign power. It was charged that not only had he given away priceless concessions, but that the public debt was to be transferred into the hands of the English, and the custom-houses turned over to them as

IS IT A PLOT AGAINST THE KAISER? The Hohenzolern Revelations Create an Unfavorable Sensation.

Nobles, Soldiers, Sailors and Editors Combined in a Monster Movement Against the Emperor.

BERLIN, Oct. 16.—Is the publication of Prince Hohenzolern's diary detailing the relations of Prince Bismarck and Emperor William part of a plot by the Kaiser's enemies to undermine his influence and crush the autocratic power he has acquired since the overthrow of the first chancellor?
That such is the case is the widespread opinion of disinterested persons who have analyzed the incident, which is now convulsing the country and which may be truly described as the paramount sensation of the decade in Germany. There is no other ground, upon which, the political experts may account for the combated by one of the younger Hohenzolerns in exposing to the world such damning characters in the Kaiser's innermost history.
Public sentiment, which earlier in the week, inclined to the view that the Kaiser had emerged from the incident with credit, has veered in the other direction in consequence of the publication of fuller details and especially of the quotation of the Kaiser's assertion that he might possibly lock Bismarck up in the fortress of Spandau. This of itself was enough to reverse the tide and turn it in favor of the Kaiser's enemies.
It has been known to your correspondent for some months that the Kaiser had been combated by one of the most powerful and influential cliques that ever undertook a court intrigue.
It includes a brilliant array of princes, grand dukes, generals, admirals and editors, who among themselves have formed a society with an unprecendented scale in all classes of society with Emperor William as its president. It was these "pessimists" the Kaiser had in mind in his Breslau speech in September when he advised them to get out and stay out of Germany. With the intricate system of secret intelligence with which the Kaiser is surrounded, it is almost inconceivable that he could have been kept in ignorance of the approach of the Hohenzolern publication and thus deprived of an opportunity to stop it.
The induction of Rev. Gordon Dickie into the pastorate of St. Stephen's church last evening was a very impressive service and was largely attended.
The ceremony was opened with prayer and singing, after which Rev. A. H. Foster read a narration of the late history of the church. He said that in May, 1894, the pastor left for an extended trip through the old country and while away it was learned that his services were desired in another sphere. He returned to the church for a few weeks and then left to take up educational work. The church was then left for four months without a pastor. At the end of that year a settlement was made which had hoped would be satisfactory, but scarcely had the new pastor become acquainted to his duties when he left to join another educational institution. This was nearly fourteen months ago. During that fourteen months the congregation had suffered vicissitudes, but without a pastor for that time.
"At last it came to the minds of this people that there was a man who might well succeed the able man who had charge of the congregation in the years gone before. They very heartily and unanimously extended a call to Gordon Dickie of St. Stephen's. This call was not based on the abnormal success of candidacy but was based on the record of his work in all the churches, of his scholarship and ability.
He accepted the call, and he is here tonight to be inducted into the pastorate of this church in worthy succession to the great man who have gone before him.
The induction service was then carried out, after which Rev. Dr. Macdonald addressed the minister, assuring him of the hearty co-operation of the congregation in all his church work. Dr. Fotheringham then addressed the people.
Upon the conclusion of the service the congregation was invited to the church hall, there to meet the new pastor.
Given a staple article, and no amount of advertising will give it a permanent and profitable sale unless it is backed by merit; on the other hand, if you do not make it known it will fail, however great the merit.—Earl & Wilson, N. Y.

LEWIS ARRESTED FOR PERJURY

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 16.—Tom Lewis, after being on the witness stand for one hour and a half this afternoon, was placed under arrest, charged with perjury in connection with the London bribery case.

In his evidence he gave a straight denial of the stories told by the other witnesses, and in part contradicted his own previous evidence.

Lewis was recalled and asked to be sworn over again. He had been ill when he testified a few days ago, and didn't want to be held responsible for his evidence given then. Col. Denison refused to grant bail without the consent of the crown, and Lewis will spend the night in custody.

Mr. Robbette, K. C., made a determined effort to obtain his release on bail, and his assertion that the case was a political one led to warm triangular argument between the counsel for the crown, the defense and the bench.

FOUND DEAD BODY OF NEW BORN CHILD

MONTREAL, Oct. 16.—At seven o'clock this morning Constable Lettice was called to 14 Emery street, and he was there informed that Miss M. L. Lavallee of No. 12 Emery street had just found the body of a newly-born child. On proceeding to No. 12 Emery street he was shown the body, which was that of a quite newly-born female child, which Miss Lavallee informed him she had found in a small box in an adjoining passage. The box was a small one and of the kind used as a receptacle for refuse.
