IRISH POPLINS.

They Are Very Fashionable Owing to Even Growing Out of the War. English women have this season gone in for Irish poplin with enthusiasm. Even l'aris has felt the effect of the fad, and has turned out fetching costumes of 'Popline Irlandaise' which have been bought by English patrons and by the Continental set that affects English fashions. Of course the bravery of the Irish troops in South Africa and the Queen's visit to Ireland are at the bottom of the fashion, but the Qaeen's love for Irish poplin is no and full enough to drape up in on the in puff at the elbow, is caught up on the in side of the arm with a bow, and falls over don society journals has been describing the poplins ordered for the Queen's wear at the time of her accession to the throne, and no recent purchases could sound more gorgeous in the telling. > did she in those old days; but her tastes are quieter now, and the poplins she recently selected for her own use and for gitts are less noisy, if not less beautiful, than the crimson, purple and green patterns. They were, however, designed especially for royal use. Royal tern and maidenhair figured in gold on white, a pink ground was brocaded in scattered hamrocks, a heliotrope was covered with sharrocks, a senotrope was covered with purple thistles. Even in royal dress fabrics the Japanese order of flower ar-rangement has evidently made its way; and it must be admitted that, sore from entalist's point of view, the the sen hamrock, the rose and the thistle have better decorative quality when used alone
