FOR INGROWING TOE NAIL.

An ingrowing toenail is very painful and often requires surgical attention for the simple reason that people are in clined to think of it as "only an ingrowing toenail."

The first sign of this trouble is sore ess in the flesh beside the nail. skin becomes very much inflamed. The nail presses down into the flesh and the experiences great inconvenience in walking or even wearing a shoe.

STARFISH.

The starfish has a singular advantage over its human contemporary. Should it lose an "arm" or ray, it can straightway set to work and grow another. It is not infrequent for fishermen to find a starifsh which has lost all its rays but one, and it may lose all its rays without sacrificing its life. Indeed, one bright and particular star among these singular beings, being of a timid disposition, has a tendency to discard its rays at the approach of a foc. It is therefore natural that of that particular species it is almost imposible to find a perfect specimen. Then there are starfishess which have not the distinctive points of a star. One is like a pentagon; another like a sunflower. The starfish has not mense. It cannot see or smell. To to its spelndid isolation, it is deaf. The starfish has not much way it cats is not pretty. In reality, however, these figures are not an indictment of our manhood, but or industrial cases, induces a compel discrimination against men in favor of women. While 500,000 women and city him subways, elevators, and cars in their rish for the shops and factories every morning, 500,000 men in New York City and state are jobless. The New York department of labor hus just made public figures to that effect. Many of the 50,000 husbands who are being supported by their wives probably would be found in the ranks of this army of meningoved men.

Still others of the husbands who are in the ranks of this army of unemployed mea.

Still others of the husbands who are being supporfed by their wives are probably victims of industrial diseases or of the system which makes, or considers, aman of 46 old and refuses to employ him. It is a deplorable fact that in many machanical trades the average period of a man's activity has been shortened to but fifteen years.

The husband who is being supported, by his wife is most not to be scorned, but to be pitted. Too often we read of middle abed men who commit suicide, because they have reached the age when industry no longer wants them, and they cannot hear to be a burden upon their wives and children. SOME HEN, THIS.

Braddock, Pa., Bird Lays Them Boiled.

There are chickens and chickens, and the famous goose that laid the golden egg of the fable, but Bradddock has produced a hen that promises, if the breed can be perpetrated, to pull down the high cost of living. Postmaster Christian H. Sheels, of

Braddock, who is now closing a ser vice of 20 years in the office, is the discoverer of the remarkable chicken that has done the trick, and now he is the envied of early morning housewives and other early-to-rise business men who are compelled to swallow their eggs whole and uncooked, for Postmaster Sheets has always been an early riser, getting to the postoffice anywhere from 5 to 5.30 the morning.

The hen that laid the eggs bought by Mr. Sheets decided she would go the ordinary cackler one better, and consequently is now delivering them hard-boiled and ready for serving. When the eggs were first discovered by Postmaster Sheets in that condition it was thought by him and his family to have been a practical joke, but when others of the same character followed, it at last dawned upor the owner of the eggs that he had found a bird that rivaled the fabled one that laid the golden eggs.

"No more exorbitant gas or coal bills, no more boiling over a hot fire in the kitchen in the summer mornented if the individual attended to the all as soon as the first symptom of in waiting for cooking," said Mrs. Sheets to her husband. The cackle of the hen that laid Postmaster Sheets' eggs not only announces that an egg has been laid, but is also the signal that breakfast is ready.

The eggs were bought from Charles Seewald, one of the letter carriers of the Braddock post office. Recently
Mr. Seewald added some additional laying hens to his flock. Now he is swamped with orders for the eggs, as all the clerks and carriers in the Brad dock office went them. The price has mounted, but Postmaster Sheets holds him to his contract.—Pittsburg Gaz-

LIGHT IMPROVEMENT. (Engineering Record)

Meanwhile there has been such rapid rowth in the improvement of the illumnants themselves that sacrifices of light or decorative effects have much less ignificance then they would have had a significance then they would have had a few years ago. Metalic filament lamps, and gas maniels as well, have been immensely improved and steady lights at an efficiency that is astonishingly great. It is quite certain, for instance, that the ordinary are lamps between carbon terminals is on a swift downgrade toward oblivion except insofar as a certain proportion of intensive arcs, valuable for their color approximating daylight, are concerned. A high power incandeceent portion of intensive arcs, valuable for their color apiroximating daylight, are concerned. A high power incandeceent lamp works at an efficiency considerably greater than that of the ordinary arc, requires much less attention, and is infinitely steadier. The only are iluminants that seen marked for continued userulness are those of greater power depending on metallic vapors for their efficiency. Such, for instances are the intense fiame and luminous arcs and the mercury arc, together, perhaps, with some others not yes well known. In gas lighting the high-efficiency mantel operated often under high pressure leaves no further excuse for the older forms of burner. From now on, therefore, the art of illumination can advance in almost any direction with improved material and to be sacrificed for more desirable things to be sacrificed for more desirable things the economy will not be left out of sight.

There was much speculation among the inspectors at the immigration station when the Prinz Adelbert began discharging passengers. One of the male passengers was apparently coming down the gangplank on stilts, and the inspectors wondered at such a strange proced ure. Towering high above the heads of the other passengers, the man slowly made his way as though he found the art of walking down an incline on stilts a delicate proposition. When the object of their curiosity neared them, the inspectors found that he was not only minus the stilts, but was very much bow

The man is Julius Lambach, seven feet two inches tall, of Brussels, Belgium, and the object of his visit to America is to increase his height. Julius wants the kinks in his lower limbs climinated, and kinks in his lower himbs eliminated, and he is on his way to consult a specialist in Chicago, who makes a business of straightening deformed limbs. Physicians at the immigrant station told Julius that if he can have the curvatures removed he will be about four inches taller. This brought a smile to his face, for he explained he will then he the for, he explained, he will then be the tellest man in continental Europe; a dis-tinction which he has long sought. It is important, the court declared, that these men be treated as American citizens and not as so many foreign hands.

The question of "attitude" is at the bottom of a good many of our social problems. The contemptuous attitude which organized labor in this country has in years past taken toward the unskilled immigrant workers has forced the birth of the Industrial Workers of the World and the introduction of syndicalism into this country.

Many of our slum problems are directly traceable to the false attitude which not only citizens but the public officials take toward the immigrant population. In the foreign sections of this city the streets and alleys are often not given the same attention by the city employee that

CITY OWNS PAPER.

Dresden Publication is Now Municipal Property.

It is am interesting fact that a news-paper is owned and administered by the ity of Dresden, the property having been bequeathed to the municipality. In the year 1858 Dr. Justus Guentz, publisher of the Dresdener Auzeiger and proprietor of an advertising bureau with a concession from the Saxon Govern-ment willed the bureau and the right of publishing the Dresdener Anzeiger as a special foundation for the common wel-far under the condition that the profits should be used for beautifying Dresden and for charitable purposes. During his-lifetime he retained at first fifteen-six-teenths, later two-thirds and finally one-half of the net profits. After his death his heirs received and will receive until their death one-third of the profits. The head of the city of Dresden and his representative, with equal rights, were lesignated as administrators of the founlation for all time. In 1895 the print-house woner, Clemens Blochmann, who had printed the Anzeiger from 1848 until that time, en-Anzeiger from 1848 intil that time, en-larged the foundation by the gift of his-well-equipped printing establishment-without retaining for bimself or heirs any shares of the profits which are employed for the same purpose as those of the original Dr. Guentz foundation. The annual profits of the united foundations amount now to about $60,000.

WHAT BECAME OF THE FARM

HANDS?

HANDS?

(Detroit Free Press)

The immigration figures for last year, now published, fail to bear out a theory that is often suggested when the cost-of-living problem is discussed. They show anything but the reputed inability to secure farm labor which is frequently-said to underlie the rise of prices.

Over 35,00 persons came from abroad to Michigan during the year, but nearly a third of these were women and children without occupations, so that the formal of workers of all kinds was less than 23,000. In the classified list of these 23,000 it is noticeable that only three kinds of labor rose above the thousand mark, being farm laborers with a total of 6,500. laborers—meaning unskilled laborers, we assume—to the number of 5,575, and servants, presumably domestic, 3,564. Not a clessification of skilled workers shows ely aproach to these figures, 562 clerks, and accountants being the next highest in the list.

The two classes of service, farm and and accountants being the next highest in the list.

The two classes of service, farm and domestic asistants, are thus by far the highest in the list of our limitgrants, yet it is these very classes in which there is most complaint of extreme shortage. What becomes of the new farm hands and house servants? Do they remain in their ascribed fields of toll only long enough to seek employment in the factories? Some further light on the point seems necessary.
