

you will express to Mr Lapointe, for me, the pleasure I had in meeting and hearing him this evening.

said a few words to him in London Bicknell's rooms later on.

The subject for debate was:

"That this Rome looks to the application of liberal ideas as the best means of restoring the welfare of the Dominion."

It was by far the best debate I have ever attended. There was tremendous enthusiasm, especially for Mr Lapointe, and keen interest on both sides of the debate. The debate involved not almost purely a political one, and the motion was carried by 151 to 60.
I think the result is quite significant of the trend of opinion in the University at the present time.

I hope that this may be of some interest to you, and that
