

children; men who were content to plan and plant, to till and build, and if need be,—to wait. Such homeseekers — and not the foolish speculators — were the men who had sane views of the future of the West, who saw its possibilities and its real destiny. The sods

Mouth of Omand's Creek