"Regard me not as altered when removed
To the hereafter;
Think of me still as loving and as loved,
With joy and laughter.
"Delay not thou when I have wounded sore,
Till thou outlive me,
To grant the pardon that I here implore,
But now forgive me."

The Beautiful Land of Nod
Come, cuddle your head on my shoulder, dear,
Your head like the golden-rod,
And we will go sailing away from here
To the beautiful land of Nod.
Away from life's hurry, and flurry, and worry,
Away from earth's shadows and gloom,
To a world of fair weather we'll float off together
Where roses are always in bloom.
Just shut up your eyes, and fold your hands,
Your hands like the leaves of a rose,
And we will go sailing to those far lands
That never an atlas shows.
On the North and the West they are bounded by rest,
On the South and the East by dreams;
'Tis the country ideal, where nothing is real,
But everything only seems.

Just drop down the curtains of your dear eyes,
Those eyes like a bright blue-bell,
And we will sail out under starlit skies
To the land where the fairies dwell.
Down the river of sleep our barque shall sweep,
Till it reaches that mystical isle
Which no man hath seen, but where all have been.
And there we will pause awhile,
I will croon you a song as we float along,
To that shore that is blessed of God,
Then ho! for that fair land, we're off for that rare land,
That beautiful land of Nod.

Mrs. Corcoran—a health specialist—has this to say on self-reliance in her department:
We are all, at times, saddened when our children, or those whom we love or feel interested in, fail, or refuse to take our advice.

Knowledge is but the accumulation of experiences; we like to use it to make the way smoother, success quicker and with less friction for those who come after us, so they may be saved experiences which have been painful to us or to others.

We may be wrong, however; the young person, too prone to take advice, is apt to be a character in which self-reliance is but feebly developed.

Faith in self is the strongest constructive force in character building. He that relies upon another receives negative help; self-reliance develops positive force and the growth, attained in the positive conquest, far outweighs any other possible gain.

We can only help others in proportion as we are able to point out the strength and principles of self help.

When a child shows a positive tendency, always listen and try first to get his point of view, consider his point before suggesting your own or before putting on the "negative lid."

We should welcome experiences for our children rather than try to save them, unless the known results are surly disastrous. The child develops resistance by conquests—give him the things to conquer.

We are often disappointed in the children of famous people. But may it not be due to the fact that the fame of the parents has been won by conquests made by their strong positive force and self-reliance?

A successful man or woman, in whom individuality is strongly developed is apt to crush the individuality of those about him. Many children are too much parented.
