A Barque's Crew's Terrible Experience Nine Perished.

A London cable says: News was received a cre to-day that the British barque Kate Sancton, Capt. Evans, which sailed from Shields on Nov. 4th for Pensacola, was abandoned in a sinking condition in the North Sea on the 11th inst. The vessel encountered terrific gales while proceeding on her voyage, and was badly damaged by both the wind and sea. Her sails were torn into shreds, her yards and masks went by the board, and everything movable about the decks was washed away. The barque was strained so much in the raging sea that she soon comm-need to make The barque was strained so much in the raging sea that she soon comm-need to make water fast, and although the crew worked with desperate energy at the pumps they were finally compelled to give up the hopeless task and take to the boats. Undoubtedly Scotchmen have largely had to do with the making of Canada, and happily they have for the most part left their mark on her for good. We find their names much associated, too, with the making of this wonderful railway, by means of which all this marvellous scenery is witnessed.
Look at the picture we give you of a specimen of a good road in these parts before the railway came, and then see the iron road cut through, or cut out of the sides of perpendicular cliffs, the workmen in some cases having had to be lowered by ropes from above in order to get at their work.
From side to side of rushing waters the train crosses on trestle bridges ike that of which we give you an illustration, and finds its way along ledges of rock, twisting and turning in every direction on the brink of the precipices below. On some parts of the road great wooden erections, called snowsheds (something of the character of tunnels), have had to be put up to protect the line from anow in winter. By this means the road is scarcely, if ever, blocked, even daring heavy falls of snow. And, thus, by one device and another, and by the exercise of constant, vigilant inspection, this railway, though covering such an extent of country, and though having to face so many perilous places, can, up to the present time, thankfully record that they have only lost the life of one passenger, and that was in consequence of his standing on the steps of the

Wherever we went, it seemed as if we met "oor ain folk," and these same folk seem generally to get "the guiding o't." Here then, amidst the roses and fragrant breezes of this favored Isle, I must leave you, with many regrets that out trip has come to an end. It is a hurried journey that we have taken, and we have had but glimpees of the inexhaustable resources of this great country. But if these little sketches have added somewhat to your knowledge of what Canada is, if it has increased your pride in her, if it has kindled a desire to do what may be in you power to build up its fortunes, I shall feel they have not been written in vain. The high moral and the religious character of her present population, the wise and true foundations that they are laying for future development and prosperity make one long that those remaining in the Old Country should thoroughly realize how much reason they have to rejoice in our common kinship, and that those thinking of coming out to Canada to try their fortunes should come with a hearty desire to do their utmost for the land of their adoption. There has been some dissponiment this year at the increase of the population during the last decade being only half a million. For Men Gally.

Men who shave themselves often complain of the difficulty that they experience in keeping their razors sharp. If they would adopt the methods of the professional barber in one or two respects they would find the task of keeping the razor in a proper condition by no means a difficult one. If you watch an amateur stropping his razor you will notice that when he turns it the edge is frequently next the leather—in other words, he turns it on the edge. This should never be done, as the fine edge is very, likely to touch the strop and be turned. A barber always turns his hand so that the back of the blade is next the leather and the edge in the sir. Again, am a should never use a strop made of leather glued to wood. A great many are sold, but all are destructive to razors. There is always more or less of a shock when the thin blade is brought against any unyielding substance, and the entire edge is frequently next the leather words a razor. The strop should be of leather, with no backing whatever. Another point that is little understood is I wonder whether we shall find the city of Steveston an accomplished fact this year?

and Lady Trutch were ready to help us to see all that could be seen. As it was, the Governor kindly drove us down to the magnificent harbor of Esquimalt, three miles from Victoria, the headquarters of the North Pacific squadron. Several warships were riding at anchor, adding one more touch to the likeness to England. The Admiral of the fleet, Admiral Hotham, had been good enough to give us an invitation to tea on board the flagship, the Warspite, commanded by Captain Hadworth Lambton, and so here, on the Pacific Ocean, I paid my first visit to a British warship. Everything on board looked spotless in its whiteness and brightness and trimmess, and the Admiral's room, in the fend bows of the ship, was like a drawing-room for cosiness and comfort, a bright fire bourning in a grate, and comfortable chairs and tables and ornaments, all looking as if we were ashore. Admiral Hotham gave at high character to British Columbia; he had been here for five months and this was only the second wet day he had seen—climate, peple and all surroundings were amongst the pleasantest he hadknown in his nautical wanderings. It was saf that we should not have the opportunity of seeing the place to full advantage, but our brief stay was full of enjoyments, including an evening at Government House, and here, too, we met our friend, Professor Henry Drummond, who had just arrived from Australia and Japan, and who now joined our party for the homeward trip.
