The fourth sets forth the military, naval and aerial clauses, and the fifth takes up disposition of the former German colonies.

The other chapters are not as yet altogether finished, but they will concern reparations and economic and financial questions, and will deal with the international labor legislation treaty.

head.

This all leads up to the king of the buffalo herd in the great park at Banff beside the towering pile of Cascade Mountain where the C. P. R. tracks skirt the base. Six feet high at the shoulders he stands with a mighty depth of chest, a tremendous head and a patriarchal beard of brown silk that sweeps on a level with his knees. He is a stupendous creature and has impressed his powers of dominance on all the other bulls in the pastures. Visitors marvel at his bulk and his very apparent size and power. He is a ten weight of life—driven brain and bone and flesh.

Yet he is a user, nevertheless. He stepped into the place of a better through force of circumstances and the ability to see the opportune moment. For many years "Sir Donald" was emperor of the buffalo at Banff. He more than topped six feet at the shoulders, his head was as hard and as heavy as a granite slab, his agility was that of a cat, his charge was like the rush of the avalanche down a steep mountain side. With ease he kept the young bulls in second place, included in their number being the present leader. In time it needed but a slow swing of the heavy head to make the other bulls scamper. Like a wise leader he paid little attention to a private quarrel of young males, and naturally they fought among themselves to prove superiority. The present dictator whipped them all. And it came to pass that he looked again on Sir Donald with a red eye and that sturdy and astute leader recognized the need of the application of first principles. He broke a horn on the hard skull of the younger, and he trampled all feelings of equality or opposition from that vanquished beast.

The years rolled on, Sir Donald passed the thirty year milestone. His teeth grew poor, winter found him thin. A touch of rheumatism shook him up, and his eyesight dimmed. It was the hour of the young bulls. Led by the last defeated contestant he attacked the veteran chieftain on a mass, and, still respectful of his prowess were satisfied with keeping him outside the herd by unflinching

In these days of hectic reconstruction it might be well for some peoples of the world to look on the way that community animal life is governed, on its placid contentment, its aspirations and its administration. No true contentment exists excepting there be a leader. Sheep follow the bell-wether, wolves follow the pack leader, bands of moose, or mountain sheep, herds of goats are all led by individual masters. Ants and bees are lost without their kings and queens, while the industrious beaver would never be satisfied in his aquatic home unless there was a head to the colony. The bull whale rules his herd, the bull walrus administers the high justice, the middle and the low in his own little world. In every band of wild or half wild horses that ranges the prairies there is one who is head, keeper of order and strict government.

Always excepting the cases of the busy bee, the meek sheep, or the sexless mule the leader is a male, always when rebellion or insurrection breaks forth it is from among the vigorous youngsters of the same sex. When the blood of youth runs hot in the veins of a walrus bull, or the mountain buck, or the male young wolf or whale or ram, he aspires to conquer and to lead.

To one who has made even a superficial study of the habits of animals there is something akin to human in their methods and characteristics. There is even an envious few who covet leadership, there is always a large number willing to rush with fang and claw and ripping horn to destroy one who had led but who has lost. And it is always noticed that the dictator of any herd or band keeps a watchful eye on his restless young males and stands ever ready to crush insurrection and high aspirations with teeth or hoof or crashing
