What is drudgery, anyhow? Is not the bank clerk counting out bills all day long for customers, a well-dressed drudge? There is nothing artistic nor really very helpful to humanity in his labor. He adds beauty to the landscape and conduces to the health and happiness of a large number of people.

HOW A SISTER'S PRESENCE OF MIND SAVED A LITTLE FINGER.

It happened that there was no one at home but his fifteen-year-old sister and the servants on the memorable day when little Harry McPherson came tearing through the front gate into the house, screaming at the top of his voice:

'I've cut my finger off! Oh, I've cut my finger off! Oh-h-h!'

When he rushed up stairs into his sister's room, followed by the servants, who were as excited as he, his little terror-stricken face was a pitiful sight to behold. Throwing himself into his sister's arms, he held up his chubby bleeding right hand, which was indeed minus the upper half of its middle finger. 'Oh, sister, I've killed my hand!' he cried. I've cut it off—off!'

The situation was trying. There was nothing in the whole world that this sister loved better than the little curly-haired brother who had come to her for help and comfort. If there had been a doctor present, had the father and mother been at home and taken charge of the little boy, there's no telling how the sister would have behaved. She might indeed have misbehaved—by crying, or fainting, or asking a dozen useless questions about how it happened, or when or where. She might have said, as so many well-meaning sisters have said on similar occasions: 'Well, Harry has gotten punished

The inborn pride of Chicagoans and their neighbors in their city and all that belongs to it, especially since the Fair is well illustrated by a remark made by a youngster in Evanston, Ill., the other day.

His mother overheard him talking with his little sister and discussing great questions, as children do, with all the gravity of his elders.

Finally the little girl asked, 'Harry, where was the world made? And Harry, with an air of superior wisdom, 'Why, don't you know, Dotty? In Chicago, of course!'

RUB THE OTHER EYE.

Nine persons out of ten with a cinder or any foreign substance in the eye will instantly begin to rub the eye with one hand while hunting for their handkerchief with the other. They may and sometimes do remove the offending cinder, but more frequently they rub until the eye becomes inflamed, bind a handkerchief around the head, and go to bed. This is all wrong. The better way is to rub the other eye as vigorously as you like.

A few years since I was riding on the engine of a fast express. The engineer threw open the front window, and I caught a cinder that gave me the most excruciating pain. I began to rub the eye with both hands. 'Let your eye alone and rub the other eye' (this from the engineer). I thought he was chaffing me and worked the harder. I knew you doctors think you know it all, but if you will let that eye alone and rub the other one, the cinder will be out in two minutes, persisted the engineer. I began to rub the other eye, soon I felt the cinder down near the inner canthus, and made ready to take it out. 'Let it alone and keep at the well eye,' shouted the doctor pro-tem. I did so for a minute longer, and looking into a small glass he gave me found the offender on my cheek. Since then I have tried it many times, and have advised many others and have never known it to fail in one instance, unless it was something sharp as a piece of steel or something that cut the ball and required an operation to remove it.

THE VALUE OF A GOOD COW.

There are several elements in the value of a good cow, all of which, however, enter into the total sum of profit. This is the largest product at the least cost. Thus it is that a cow that gives the most butter at the least cost of food and money invested in the animal is the best one to raise. A cow that gives milk showing five per cent. of butter may yet be a less profitable cow than one giving four per cent., if the quantity of the milk given by the latter is one-fourth more than that of the other one. The mere fact that one animal gives richer milk than others is only one element in her favor; to excel altogether she must give at least so much milk as will make the saleable product greater, and the food consumed must also be in excess of that used by her competitor. It is quite reasonable that attention is to be given to the butter in the milk, but at the same time the quantity of the yield as well as all to enter into consideration. The cows that excel in all these points are by no means numerous; indeed, it may be said that they are scarce, notwithstanding the common reports to the contrary. A great many cows will yield a large quantity of milk, and some of these will give unusually rich milk, but those that will persist for even three months in their full yield may be counted on the fingers of the two hands. A great deal about cows was learned at the Chicago tests, and what was learned there may be well considered as having swept the board clean of all previous exaggerated claims for phenomenal animals. Not one there could be called a phenomenon in any special point of excellence. And this leaves the chance open for a great many owners of good cows to bring them to the front and from them, by continued efforts in improvements, to found profitable herds for butter dairies.—N. Y. Times.
