

Two Cases of Eczema and How They Were Cured.

Further Proof That Dr. Chase's Ointment is a Positive Cure for Chronic Eczema.

If you read these letters you will find that Dr. Chase's Ointment is not to be classed among ordinary salves and ointments.

By actually curing itching, stinging eczema in many thousands of cases it has stood the most severe test to which any ointment can be put.

Mr. J. Brice, Temperance road, Parry Sound, Ont., writes: "Just a line to praise Dr. Chase's Ointment for what it has done for my wife. She has been suffering with eczema in her head for two years, and has spent no end of money with doctors and for ointments, which did her no good. She had about given up hope of ever being cured, when someone told her to try Dr. Chase's Ointment. By the use of this Ointment the trouble has left her entirely, so we have unbounded faith in it. I have told several people about the Ointment."

Mrs. W. G. Dowden, Greenspond, Bonaville Bay, Nfld., writes: "I suffered with eczema on my hands, and for eighteen months was so bad that I could not use a needle to sew or do anything. I could scarcely dress myself. Though I had lots of salves from doctors, I could never get much benefit from them. Then I sent for a sample of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found it very different in action. It was not long before my hands began to heal, and four 60c. boxes made them well. I cannot praise Dr. Chase's Ointment too highly, and frequently give some to others to get them using it, for I know that it will cure."

In the home Dr. Chase's Ointment is of almost daily usefulness, for by relieving chafing and irritation of the skin it prevents eczema and similar itching skin diseases. Applied to all cuts and wounds, it prevents blood poisoning and heals the skin. Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

A Tactful Friend.

The old man almost groaned, and uttered an exclamation of annoyance. "My dear countess," he said, "the mere mention of that young man is—distressing to me. And when I think that all the money has fallen into his lap, in addition to the title and the estates, and that he obstinately refuses to declare himself, I feel—well, I don't think I can attempt to express my sentiments. I only know this: That, notwithstanding Lady Norah's relinquishment of the money which the earl left to her, thinking her to be his daughter, I mean to make some sort of terms with the young earl, and if he doesn't act generously and liberally—well, I shall make bold to show fight, despite Lady Norah's instructions. There are times when a lawyer must consider his client's interests, even though he disregard that client's wishes."

Lady Ferndale still sat and waited, and presently the footman announced Mr. Guildford Berton.

The light fell full upon his face as he entered, and though Lady Ferndale had been somewhat prepared for the change in his appearance, she could scarcely suppress a start. He was ordinarily pale, but the whiteness of his face that morning was ghastly in its density; there were dark hollows under his eyes, and his mouth had the drawn appearance of a man who has spent long hours of sleeplessness and harassment. But he smiled the old smile as he made his bow and took the seat to which Lady Ferndale motioned him.

He had gone to the Court on the preceding evening, and had got Norah's note, and it had deceived him, as she had intended, until later on, when, as he sat in his gloomy room haunted by the ghost of Becca, the truth flashed upon him. He seized his hat and dashed to the Court, saw Harman, and learned that Norah had fled—she had escaped him!

It was too late to start in pursuit that night; he spent the hours pacing the silent room, tearing at his nails and watching the clock, and had caught the early train and gone straight to Mr. Petherick, and failing to get anything out of the cautious old lawyer, had come on to Lady Ferndale's, knowing that it would be to her that Norah would naturally think of flying for refuge.

Every Neuralgic Headache Cured! Use "Nerviline"—It Won't Fail.

There may be a thousand pains; yet, excepting sciatica, neuralgia is the worst. Most remedies are not strong enough or penetrating enough to relieve neuralgia. You know everything you have tried has failed to give even momentary relief, and you have decided that neuralgia must be borne forever.

Do not make this mistake — try NERVILINE.

Apply it to the sore spot. Notice the glow that spreads deeper and wider as Nerviline's curative power is carried further and further into the tissue. How quickly the pain is soothed! How rapidly it lessens! In a little while you have forgotten the pain—it has actually gone.

Neuralgia gives Nerviline an opportunity of demonstrating its superiority over all other pain remedies. Not magnetic, as you might imagine after you have used it—simply the application of scientific knowledge to the relief of pain.

Nerviline is a great outcome of modern medical ideas. You cannot afford to be without it, because pain comes quickly and comes to us all. Guaranteed to cure the aches and pains of the whole family. Large bottles, 50 cents, trial size, 25 cents; at druggists or the Ostarhorone Co., Kingston, Canada.

"I don't only think so, I am sure of it," she said, with quiet conviction. "I'll go further, Mr. Berton, and promise you that she will come back, and to the Court!"

He looked at her, his eyes glittering like spots of fire in their intensity. She met his scrutiny unflinchingly.

"Are you satisfied?" He rose at once. "I am satisfied; I will trust you," he said. "I will go back and wait. Will you tell her"—he paused, and then went on deliberately—"that I am patient and silent as—death, Lady Ferndale?"

"I will tell her," she said. "Patient and silent," he repeated. When he reached the door he hesitated, and stood listening for a moment, then with a low bow went out, and Lady Ferndale dropped back in the chair, and covering her eyes with her hand indulged in the shudder which she had been repressing during the whole of the interview.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Cyril's Bride.

The day of the wedding arrived. Since the morning when Lady Ferndale had declared herself in favor of the speedy marriage, Norah had seemed to be living in a dream; and even now, as she stood holding her friend's hand as they waited for the carriage to take them to the quiet church of St. Cuthbert's, which lies hidden away in the serene and most placid of corners in Tyburnia, she could scarcely realize that within an hour she would be Cyril's wife.

Up to now the secret had been well kept, the greatest danger to it being Lord Ferndale's difficulty in refraining from addressing Cyril as "Arrowdale," and Lady Ferndale declared that she had never been on such tender-hooks in her life as she was whenever the two met in the presence of Norah. She had, too, a wholesome dread of Mr. Petherick.

"He will be sure to find it out," she assured Cyril. "He will want to see the license or catch your real name during the service, and then there will be a scene!"

But Jack, who appeared to find a singular delight in managing the whole affair, hit upon a plan for disposing of the old lawyer, and two days before that fixed for the wedding had persuaded him to go down to Santleigh.

"It seems to me, sir," he said, gravely, "that the place ought not to be left entirely to the care of servants. Suppose the young earl were to turn up there suddenly. Some one ought to be there to receive him; besides, you can't tell what may be going on there, or what mischief that very nice young man, Mr. Guildford Berton, may be up to."

"Good gracious me, yes!" said Mr. Petherick; "but—but I wanted to be at Miss Norah's wedding, Mr. Wesley; in fact, I—I think she would wish me to be present."

"Yes, no doubt, but Miss Norah has such a lofty idea of duty, don't you know, that I fancy she would rather miss you at the wedding than have you neglect the young earl's interests."

And after a little more persuasion the old gentleman came and explained matters to Norah, presented her with a remarkably handsome bracelet, and started for Santleigh.

"We mustn't disappoint him, Cyril," said Jack, with a smile, as they watched the train off. "Suppose you write him a line as from the earl, you know, requesting him to kindly remain at Santleigh until you return."

Cyril caught at the idea at once, and nothing could describe Mr. Petherick's astonishment when, on the morning after his arrival, he received the following:

The Earl of Arrowdale will be extremely obliged if Mr. Petherick will kindly remain at Santleigh until the earl's arrival, which he trusts will be very shortly. Mr. Petherick will oblige the earl by considering this request as strictly confidential.

Having got rid of the too acute Mr. Petherick, Jack felt much easier in his mind, and able to regard the coming event with "calmness and fortitude," as he put it.

As for Cyril, he scarcely knew whether he was on his head or his heels, and spent the time which was not passed in the company of his bride-
