Badger Expounds Philosophy of Fear To Peter Rabbit From Experience

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.
"Fear very often is a good thing," began Digger the Badger.
Peter Rabbit shook his head. "I can't gree to that, Mr. Badger," said he. "It makes one feel so dreadfully uncomfortable." "But it oftens keeps you out of real trouble," declared Digger. "The one who is most fearful is the one one who is most fearful is the one most difficult to catch. Just take my own case. I never was much of a hand to be afraid. Even from the time I was a little fellow I was a good fighter. I guess I was too good a fighter. Anyway, before I was half grown there was no one of whom I was afraid out there in the Far West with the exception of Howler the Wolf. I wasn't really afraid of him. because I felt smart enough to keep out of his way. It was a bad state to be in. Yes, sir, it was so. Not being afraid I grew careless. I didn't keep watch. And so it happened that one day one of those two-legged one day one of those two-legged creatures called men surprised me so far from my home that I couldn't get back."

"What did you do?" asked Peter breathlessly.

"I started to dig in," replied Digger. "You should have seen the way I made the sand fly. But before I could get down out of reach that two-legged creature got me by the tail. I thought he would pull it out by the roots. Yes, sir, I certainly thought I was going to lose my tail. But I was perfectly willing to lose it if losing it would help me to escape. However, the roots of my tail held, and finally some water was brought and poured into the hole which I had dug, and then I had to let go and be pulled out. Something was thrown over my head and I was wrapped up it and the cord made helpless. Then I was legged executive was cleaning to sever the roots of my tail held, and then I had to let go and be pulled. Out. "It was the same kind of place Old Man Coyote was kept in."

"It was," agreed Digger. "I must confess that I was very well treated. Never in my life did I have so much to eat, and I didn't have to work for it. They nut me in a bloc core."

"I was put in a box lined with that stuff called wire, and then carried away on a long journey. When the journey ended I was in a place called a park where there were ever so many other people in fur, all kept prisoners."

Peter nodded. "I know," said he. "It was the same kind of place Old "I was under there before he missed me, and I stayed under there until
