THE CIGARSTORE RACKET. louses of Ill-Fame That Flourish Behind cigarstore racket, so common American cities, has been introduced into Mamie Earls was fined $40 and costs in the police court yesterday for keeping a house of ill-fame at 22 Adelaide street west. A robbery occurred there Saturday night. One of her girls, Flora Brown, was fined $20. The place from the outside presented the appearance of a cigar store, the windows being filled with cigar boxes, etc. An individual named Gorman entered the box and accomplished some pretty tall swearing to clear the house of its real character, but the inmates were Entertainment at Norway. On Thursday last an enjoyable enter tainment was given at the residence of B Morton, "Norwoodlie," Benlamond. The program consisted of songs, recitations and an operetta, The Gifts of the Fairy Queen, an operetta, The Gifts of the Fairy Queen, rendered by the children of the village who had been carefully and skillfully trained by the young daughters of the host. The operetta was exceedingly well rendered, all being well up in their parts. The costumes were very pretty and effective, indicating unusual taste on the part of the conductress.

The large audience were highly delighted with the performance and at their unanimous request it will be repeated at no distant date.

Between the acts refreshments were served by the popular host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Morton.

The Industrial Exhibition. ger of the Toronto industrial exhibition a copy of the prize list for the next show which is to be held from Sept. 10 to 20. The list is very neatly gotten up and well printed. On the front cover are views of Toronto in 1834 and 1884, and on the back cover sketches of sports incidental to the fair. The lists has been carefully revised and many new features are contained therein. The list will be sent to the secretaries of all the county and townshir agricultural societies and mechanics in-stitutes in the province, and will be also sent to any one who may require them on their dropping a post card to the secretary at Toronto.

PROFESSIONAL BEGGARS IN TO-

me of Their Tricks-The Pretty House

maid's Husband. Written for The World by G. H. C. It has been said, and very truly, that One half of the world does not know how the other half lives," and it may be said with equal truth that ninety-nine out of a hundred people have no idea how the miserable, ragged, starved-looking objects who haunt our public thoroughfares manage to keep body and soul together. For the benefit of those ninety nine pe cent, I will say that not only do those distressed mortals keep their souls in alliance with their body, but that a very large percentage of them do it in comfort, and not a few in absolute luxury.

Little does the wayfarer think as he stops to give a trifle to the miserable bundle of rags, sitting on some convenient step, that he is very likely giving his mite to a man much better off than cities have seen, at some time or another, ome poor wretch who hardly seemed able some poor wretch who hardly seemed able to bear up beneath his various afflictions, one leg draw up, one arm lost, and totally blind, truly a suitable object for pity and relief—but! how many have seen that same unfortunate creature when, his day's work over, he seeks the shelter and comfort of his home? Not many: I have, and if you will let my eyes see for you I will try and give you an idea of the transformation scene.

we will take this man for example; he We will take this man for example; he is well known in this part of the city. Day by day he hobbles to his seat and shows to the pitying passers-by legs covered with the most loathseme sores. "Awful sight isn't it," "Poor man, how dreadful," etc., are some of the remarks one hears; yes, it's rather awful to look at I am going to tell you how those sores are made:

That man is only suffering (like a great many more) from laziness. I know all his many more) from laziness. I know all his history, though perhaps he doesn't know it. Some time ago some friends of mine had a very pretty housemaid; said housemaid had a sweetheart (of course!) and the young ladies used to take a great delight in teasing her about her "young man," and trying to find out who he was. Here they failed; no one could discover who or what he was beyond that "he was a very nice young man and fairly well to do!" he was beyond that "he was a very nice young man and fairly well to do!"

Soon the maid married the man, and went to her own home. The young ladies begged hard to be allowed to come and see her, but—"no."

Some little time after she was married

Some little time after she was married she came to her former master's house rather late in the evening, and when about to leave one of the young ladies determined to go home with her and satisfy her curiosity anent the mysterious hushand.

After a great deal of opposition she gained her point, and after being led through a perfect maze of streets, she found herself standing before a pretty house just on the outskirts of the city. Here she had another battle with the ex-maid, who would much rather not have let her in:

would much rather not have let her in; however, she got in, and once there nothing could budge her till she had seen that wonderful husband.

The house was luxuriously furnished, and every comfort one could think of was there.

Whilst she was casting over in her mind how the things could have been bought by people in a humble line of life, the door opened and in walked, or rather limped, the most pitiable object—in fact the same man described previously. Nothing could have exceeded her look of astonishment when the pretty maid introduced him as her husband, unless it was her face when, after retiring for a time, the same individual appeared, transformed from a miserable creature into a fine, stalwart

After she had recovered a little, she ventured to ask the man "what he was," and then it was explained to her wondering and then it was explained to her wondering mind that he was a "professional beggar." The method of preparing his sores was as follows, given in his own words:

"First I take a piece of meat and rub it with vitriol, then I tie a penny, or any old copper coin securely on to it, and leave it until putrified, and green enough for-use; I then bind the meat on to my legs with dirty rags, put on my old clothes, take my stick, and limp off to make from $2 to $3 a day—never come home under $2, it would not pay."

would not pay."

No wonder the ex-maid did not wish her This man is the poor, miserable object who sits on the street and demands help from his fellow-men!

The above story is fact and the man still carries on (as far as I know) his imposition I remember walking one evening on one of the principal streets, and being attracted by the sight of a man, walking slowly along on crutches; he walked as if he had only another minute to live; one leg was tied up with a band, and his eyes—well, as much of them as could be seen—certainly much of them as could be seen—certainly were anything but pleasant to see. Presently a woman came along with an orange barrow and said, "Hullo there, Jim; come on."

Surely never was such a miracle!!!
The man let down his leg, put his crutches on the barrow, rolled down his eyes, squirted something into them from a little bottle, and walked off with the woman, as whole and sound as I was!!

I knew these were not the days of miracles, and I also knew these are the days of imposture; but I really was astonished and wondered how they could "do it" so easily. I afterwards found out, and the system is so elaborate that I must devote another article to its explanation, as I have not space in this one to lay the mysteries of the craft before the public.
