four years' of a struggle that was losing one. It had been out in serman's march to the Atlantic, nd the west had again been broken up by capture of the Mississippi valley; in which Gen, Grant had had an important and. There was really but one thing for Grant to achieve to beat Lee and capture they have suffered almost in silence, that Lee's army was sadly demoralized, and to think that the coming of Prince Henn out so long against numbers and discipline those of his own forces, eral Lee himself stated after his surmy for fighting, but that its discipline irresistible tendency of his troops to The effective strength of his was in this way reduced in one paign by 25,000 men.

Of Grant's predecessors in the of the "grand army of the Potomac," McClellan and Gen, Meade, Of the latter it is sufficient to say that at Gettys. burg his brilliant victory over Lee's invading army at the most northerly point it ever reached in some sense turned the scale of the war. Meade was a man of great military ability if not of genius, and probably have accomplished what Grant

Gen. McClellan was the victim partly of circumstances, partly of treachery. He was called to take command of the army of the Potomac immediately after the battle of Bulls Run. He found the socalled army a disorganized mass. He set to work to raise reinforcements and subject both old and new troops to scientific discipline to which it was difficult to make them submit. By steady perseverance he succeeded between July and in bringing into the field an army of 100,080 trained soldiers, and the

While his army was in process of organization it was his purpose to strike Lee in the early winter near the historical Manassas. At that time he was commander of the army of the Potomac alone. Before giving effective provide the strike for a horde of lazy Yankees?

Brantford, July 23, 1885. fect to his plans he was created commander in chief of the Union armies, and this enlargement of his sphere of action made it necessary to delay his personal operations till spring. The following he received a sharp check from the latter at Antietam the advantage remained on the whole with him.

This was due in some degree, it is gener ally believed, to the machinations of Mr. stanton, Lincoln's secretary of the war department. In him good abilities were coupled with narrow-mindedness and a lines of summer goods, comprising Thompperfidious disposition. McClellan was a son's Glove Fitting and the celebrated iemocrat, and this was a crime in Stanton's eyes. He could not be allowed succed, and before he had a fair opportunity to accomplish anything he was forced into retirement. During the many months' interval between his removal and Grant's appointment on the Potomac the way was being paved for the Potomac the way was being paved for the latter's success until the task of the latter's success until the task of affecting Lee became, as we have seen, a moves the blood taint of scrofuls, that comparatively easy one. While it would be ungenerous to withhold from Gen. Grant high praise as a a map and a soldier historic truth demands that he shall be rated no more highly than he is entitled to be placed on the honor roll, and in the long run he will probably be placed in point of military genius below both Lee and Meade, if not also below McClellan.

Germany is the abode of the shoddy of all sorts, and the chiefs of the German invasion have carried across the English channel with them their shoddy philosophy, their shoddy culture, and their shoddy manners. The veneer of French civilization, fashionable in England a century ago, was laughable and contemptible enough; but, as an affectation, it was an affectation of the best kind. That is more than can be said of the habits and tendencies which have accompanied the Teuton. These consist of vulgarisms pure and simple, unredeemed by any suspicion of this programs of grace. World: It would be interesti to know what good reason can be given for the establishment of consulate offices by the United States government in Canada. It is a mystery to every one why such an official should be required at all. His sole duty seems to be to issue certificates for the admission of goods to the United States, whether they pay duty or not, for which he charges something like $2.50 each. It matters not whether a load of turnips, or stone, or produce, or any man-ufactured article be sent to that country ufactured article be sent to that country from Canada the farce has to be gone through with and the $2.50 paid, as if it would not be sufficient to ship the goods and pay the duty at the port of entry as is done in Canada. There is only one apparent reason: the American government wishes to provide easy and lucrative berths for a horde of Yankees, and the whole can'th has to be levied upon to secure that
