springing up with civilization to have a thorough digestion of food and to correct by means of these agencies (which retard digestion) the discomfort arising from a too hasty or ill-cooked meal. It was not desirable that all our barbarous habits should die out; for some of them afforded us the highest joy.

In the course of his able sketch Mr. Bell showed that the primeval mounds stretched in a belt a thousand miles wide (which in our latitude covered the ground between the Ralny river and the sources of the Missouri), from Lake Winnipeg. In two of the mounds that he had explored on the Red river were a gorget and a long pin made from the shell of the busyoon, which lives no nearer than the sea coast of Mexico and California—a fact speaking much for the inland commerce of those early days.
