-The Dartmouth civic authorities are considering the advisability of adopting a new method of securing the popular vote on matters that retion Act, a majority vote of the qualified ratepayers. The public meeting has been a failure. It is all right for purposes of discussion, but the vote cast there is ridiculously small and in no manner reflects the sentiments of the majority of the ratepayers. In Ontario, all expenditures The expenditure is first approved of by the council, then a poll of the are opened just as on an election day and every ratepayer has an opportunity to cast his vote. Under this scheme the wish of the people on any particular matter is obtained as nearly as it is possible under existing conditions. There they have no public meetings, save what individual groups of taxpayers choose to call for purposes of discussion. The Ontario plan is worthy of adoption in Nova Scotia, as an improvement on the existing method of obtaining the voice of the people, and if the new regula tions were incorporated in the pro vincial act we believe the change would be a popular one. In the mat ter of borrowing large sums of money for expenditure on public services it is particularly desirable that a ful vote of the ratepayers be obtained and here the polling booth would gather a more representative result than the public meeting. Other pro vincial towns should look into the matter and if the change that Dart mouth seeks meets their approval, the time is opportune for them to move in the same direction.

—Unless the fruit growers of the United States have been as much astray in estimating their apple crop as were the Annapolis valley growers in their early calculations, there will be a market for Nova Scotia in the content states before many weeks in the content states are states before many weeks in the content states are states before many weeks in the content states are states before many weeks in the content states are states as and are moving back into remote content states are states as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content states are stated as a state of the content stated as a stated eastern states before many weeks in spite of the protective duty. The latest estimates place the United States crop at twenty-three million barrels, a quantity entirely too small to supply the demands of home comsumption, and of course a portion of eastern states before many weeks in this will find its way to the English market before the home markets realize that an apple famine is upon them. It would not be surprising if buyers from over the border made their appearance here soon to secure a portion of the large holdings of winter fruit that are stored in the Valley for later shipment to London and Liverpool. At any rate the shortage of the United States crop cannot but exercise a great influence in keeping a strong English market for our product, and the present outlook points to higher prices for winter fruit than have been obtained for

Because small pox exists within a mile of Bridgetown is no reason why the town should be considered a dangerous locality by the people who usually do their business here. The town is perfectly free from the disease and if small pox breaks out, it is as liable to be brought here from Halifax, St. John or some other distant city as from Carlton's Corner. The town health authorities are exercising every reasonable precaution to prevent its introduction, and the danger is little, if any greater than it has been. The fact that small pox has increased to a considerable extent in the province since last spring is stirring people up on every hand is stirring people up on every hand to the necessity of adopting preventative regulations and preparing themselves for the ever possible contingency. A few months ago Kentville was the only infected place in Nova Scotia, but now Halifax, Yarmouth, Sydney, Wolfville and half a dozen localities in Kings county swell the list and the danger of a further spread is very real. It further spread is very real. It stands the medical men in hand to the crowds who have visited the of (Kentville Advertiser.) Our contemporary, the Bridgetown Moni-Tok, is having a Monoline composing machine put into its office. This is the first weekly paper in the province to have one of these machines. The paper is of a neat make-up and is one of the best appearing journals in the province, but we doubt that with this machine they will be able to improve the machine they will be able to improve the paper in looks, but it will be published in a much quicker time. We congratulate our contemporary on its enterprise.
