[145]

When this Civil War was first threatened, your loyal City of London, in Concurrence with the Sense of many other respectable public Bodies of your Kingdom, and many of the wisest and best of your Subjects did, most humbly deprecate this Evil, foreboding, but too truly the Charges, Calamities, and Disgraces, of which it has been hitherto productive, and the greater to which it is still likely to subject this Kingdom.

Your faithful People, on that Occafion, had the Misfortune to receive from your Majefty, an Anfwer more fuitable to the imperfect Manner in which (they fear) they expressed Sentiments full of Duty, than to your Majefty's own most gracious Disposition, their inviolable Reverence to their Sovereign, and their unshaken Zeal for his true Glory; they retired in a mournful and respectful Silence, patiently awaiting the Dispofition of Providence, and the Return of your Majefty's Favour and Countenance, whenever Experience should fully disclose in its true Light, the well-founded Nature of their Apprehensions, and the fatal Tendency of those Counfels, by which the Nation has been missed.

For mifled, and deceived, your Majefty and many of your Subjects have been. No Pains have been omitted to hide from both, the true Nature of the Bufinefs, in which we are engaged; K no loyal and nmon jefty's on by r and itereft n, in f this moft ouryour thful

Lord of the ouncil

Vhen