At the tournament on Thursday afternoon, and possibly one evening an exposition of this kind of militar Canadians should see it; it is well that the public of the east should have a chance to judge that of which the pioneers of the west have long been impressed with the value of both in civic and military affairs.

The M.A. Annual Methods 1875,000 was needed for the mission work. He was a little bit ashamed of the showing made by the English Church in this respect, and he hoped to see it doing as much as, or more than the other churches, before long. Bishop Pinkham of the Diocese of Saskatchewan also spoke. Nearly all the Anglican clergy of the city were on the platform.

judge. He is a brother of Justice Maclaren of Toronto- He has a ponderous frame, and a heavy face with exceeding geniality. He spoke not as a politician, but as a man of the street, not to say the farm, when he discussed the budget. He had no fault to find with the government. He stood for a low tariff, but the Fielding tariff suited him. The time of the House was d him. The time of the House was worth $28 a minute. A. C. Bell, M.P. worth $28 a minute. A. C. Bell, M.P., had wasted $3380 last night. He accused the opposition of sneering at the leaders of the government. Those leaders, however, held their own when put up against the statesmen of other countries. They should be better paid. Maclaren's speech, by his own rule, cost Canada $806.

The gov-ernment had stolen the Conservative policy, and renamed it. Times were policy, and renamed it. Times were prosperous, but the government should stand adjourned till May 26. Hor. R. W. Scott, answering a question, said that the Alaskan Boundary Commission would meet in September. The bill introduced by Hor. Mr. Loughed in the Senate, to shut foreign labor agitators out from Canada, "Let us have no more coquetting with contains but one clause in the form "Let us have no more coquetting with a commercial rival," was how he viewed the question of reciprocity with the United States. He believed in doing as the other fellow would do, but do it first. He advocated a policy of tariff for tariff with the United States. He considered the indefinite policy of the covernment. policy of tariff for tariff with the United States. He considered the indefinite policy of the government not worthy of the dignity of Canada.

"Be friendly to all, but servile to none," he concluded.

Holmes of Huron found fault with the ethics of Richardson of Grey, and thought the golden rule should be ap-plied to matters of government. He plied to matters of government. He excused his eulogy of Mr. Fielding's budget by declaring that al good story could not be told too often. He was opposed to a high tariff because, tho it would develop manufactures, yet it would develop manufactures, yet it a corps of guides, to form an intelligence of the mass of consumers. would hurt the mass of consumers. would hurt the mass of consumers. He wanted reciprocity with the United States if it could be got on reasonable terms. He favored the removal of the duty on coal oil. He could not see why the government could not protect the salt manufacturers as well as the binder twine manufacturers. The salt manufacturers were suffering from British and United States competition. In this connection he believed the duty on soft coal should be taken of, for it required one ton of coal to make two tons of salt. The beet sugar industry did not have his brightest hopes, but some protection should be given it.

Taylor of Leeds declared that Holmes was mercurial in his political tendentes. Was he a free trader or a protectionist? With a fair field the manufacturers of Canada were ready to meet the Yankee manufacturers, but the former had one hand tied behind their backs by reason of the higher United States tariff. He criticized the government for its many inconsistencies and promises long left unfulfilled. He held that the poor man had been injured by increased taxes on sugar and tobacco, as compared with 1895. He read H.
