How many house keepers know that a pinch of salt thrown into the coffee pot when making coffee will improve the flavor of the beverage?

That tea little boy, milk added to mashed potatoes will keep them from being soggy and heavy.

That baked potatoes will not get soggy even if left in the oven for fifteen minutes or more after they are done. All they are pressed in a towel until the skin cracks, letting out the steam.

That there is nothing so good for cleaning windows and mirrors as equal parts of kerosene and water, applied with a soft cloth and dried quickly with an old cloth which has been polished by a polishing with newspaper.

Two tablespoons of kerosene and two of water will clean a large window, and dry specks will be gone.

That a little nap, even if it is only fifteen minutes, taken right after the noon meal will cure that tired feeling and enable you to do double the amount of work afterward without weariness, thus proving a genuine time saver.

That a tin wash basin will last twice as long without rusting if the bottom is given a coat of paint.
