

C 7871 3
Chilean coast. took prizes, fearing to come back may be had gone for heard Spain's fleet after he had to go west thro' mullatas, saw the rich partments there, found native principles kind of Portugal & found seems to have promised Eng had old to there and

(2) the defeat of the Armada 1588. After the Spanish galleon did not seem so formidable

(3) a successful voyage of expedⁿ fitted out by Raleigh in 1593. - Macpherson annals of Commerce says "They went with - - - they took - the largest ship ever seen in Eng - - - of whom the Queen was chief. (This man character of Eliza the public savings into such adventures) "The possession of such ~~rich~~ riches encouraged merchants to go directly to East Indies."

The very time the Eng were beginning to think of going to East Indies purely on a mercantile act the Dutch were beginning to think the same thing.
Many reasons why Dutch should. Many of richest merchants of Amsterdam had come from Antwerp & while there had been engaged in European and of spec^ulative business. They were the most eager in projects which began to be formed in Holland at this time for reaching the Indies. - But (note striking) the Dutch merchants did not venture