MICHAEL DAVITTON TEMPERANCE

On Tuesday night the total abstainers and friends of temperance in Dublin held a great meeting in the Antient Concert Rooms, for the purpose of celebrating the ninety second anniversary of the birth of Father Theobald Mathew, the apostle of temperance. The large hall was crowded. The John Dillon brass band and the St. Nicholas of Myra's fife and drum band played a choice selection of music before the meeting commenced. Shortly after eight the chair was taken by Mr. Alfred Webb.

addressing a public meeting in the city of York, that a temperance man was wise, but a total abstainer was wiser (hear and laughter). Thinking of this expression of Cardinal Manning's while listening to the speeches delivered this evening, I was trying to find out what was the d gree of wisdom to which my friend Mr. Healy and myself had arrived (laughter). I am not a total abstainer I do not know whether I ever shall arrive at that advanced stage of wisdom or not, nor whether I can even say I am a temperate vanced stage of wisdom or not, nor whether I can even say I am a temperate man, but be my degree of wisdom or of tem erance what it may, I must take exception to total abstainers claiming Father Mathew as apper aining to the alone (hear, hear). Father Mathew was one of those great characters that seem to live, as he worked, for humanity (hear, hear). I think we would be guilty of what humanitanians outside Ireland would call national selfishness if we even claimed him for Ireland (hear, hear). He was a grand character, a historic character, that belongs to humanity, and whether in England or in America or wherever the English Language is WHEREVER THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IS the name of Father Mathew is revered and honored (cheers.) One who was not a total abstamer—perhaps not more temperate than Mr. Healy and myself—once said, "Whatever our politics, whatever our creeds, whatever our conditions or avocations in life may be, we are all of one mind how Ireland should best express her sense of the merits and virtues of Father sense of the merits and virtues of Father Mathew? (applause.) These were the words of anothers great Irishman who stands out boldly in Irish history as a conspicuous figure—Damel O'Connell (tremendous cheering)—and if O'Connell, who was not a total abstainer, spoke so highly of the great apostle of temperance, I trust my friend Mr. Healy and myself may be excused, though not belonging to the Total Abstinence Leggue, for coming here tonight to do honour to the memory of a Abstractice Leggle, for coming here to do honour to the memory of a great and immortal Irishman (hear.) Of him it might be said, as was said of his great Master, that he went about doing good (hear, hear). Good he has done.

good (hear, hear). Good he has done.

IN IRELAND, IN ENGLAND AND IN AMERICA.
Wherever I travelled in these countries, especially in America, I found traces of Father Mathew's footsteps. In New York, in Boston, in Chicago, in San Francisco, wherever the scattered Clan-na-Gael are found, Father Mathew's societies are there established, doing the work and preaching the Gospel of temperance that he preached wherever he went. In New York, in Boston, in Chicago, in San Francisco, wherever the scattered Clan-na-Gael are found, Father Mathew's societies are there established, doing the work and preaching the Gospel of temperance that he preached wherever he went. I have come here to-night for the double purpose of taking part in celebrating the aniversary of a great and good Irishman, and of saying something in favour of the object sought to be achieved by the resolution put to this meeting. I am more anxious to see working men's clubs and reading rooms, and mechanics' institutes, established throughout Ireland in the interest of the working classes generally than in the interest of any particular movement that seeks to improve the social condition of the working classes, and I think the temperance advocates here in Dublin are acting very wisely in endeavouring to extend this reading-room system that has done such good work since it was first extend this reading-room system that has done such good work since it was first established here in this city. When, then, I find myself here this evening, or on any future occasion, associated with the working men to advance their social condition, I find myself in my true element among the sons of toil and industry (hear, hear), and if there is anything I can do to advance their position in Ireland or to aid them to educate themselves—as I have had to educate myself while working in England-I shall only be too glad to give my humble efforts to any such praiseworthy undertaking—(applause). Mr. Davitt was received with loud and prolonged cheering. IN AN UPROAR.

Among the industrious market women at Union market yesterday morning Herrmann, the magician, threaded his way, creating great excitement wherever he went; juggling here with eggs, cutting open squashes lined with gold dollars yonder, and astounding many of the women around him, some of whom imagined that he was the St. Louis representative of the demoniacal sovereign familiarly called "Old Nick." Hermann was relentless in his tricks as he passed from stand to stand, buying articles which he took care, on parting from the vendor, to open and expose to view large sums of money which he made them believe they contained, as well as jewels that sparkled and glittered like miniature stars.

The first thing he did after striking the market was to walk up to a huckster-stand kept by a credulous old German lady named Mrs. Orf, and ask as he looked over her stock of provisions, whether the eggs she had on hand were good.

"Yes," replied the old lady, "they are the freshest eggs in the market. If you don't think so, just break one and see for yourself."

The magician did as he was requested,

The magician did as he was requested, he picked up the egg and broke it open. To her astonishment three ten-dollar gold pieces rolled from the broken shell, which she grabbed at convulsively, but Herrmann was too quick for her and pocketed the money, while she gesticulated wildly and insisted that he should return it on the spot.

pedestrian, who happened to be a German, "how did I ever get dat darnt rabbit in mein hat? When I put it on it wasn't there, and it couldn't have grown there in an hour."

Herrmann laughed, but offered no explanation. He simply passed on to de-lude another victim, leaving the astounded agricultural districts of freland if possible. I remember in the North of England, from 1853 to 1860, when the mechanics institute movement was started by the late Sir J. Kay Shuttleworth and others, that immense good was done to the factory operatives and others who had to work for their daily bread. Previous to work for their daily bread. I commenced life as a working-man, and the proudest day of my life was the day when I brought home my first shillings, representing my week's labour, and handed it to my mother (applause). I feel to-day, having to work for my bread and butter, in another field—the field of journalism—that I am still a working-man (hear hear).

J. H. Earl, West Shefford, P. Q., writes:

'I have been troubled with liver complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect. No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horse in cases of cuts, wounds, &c., and I think it equally as good for horse as for man."

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as Ayer's CHERRY Pectoral, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always re-lieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in throat and chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and operation, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and clergymen recom-mend it. It is absolutely certain in its healing effects, and will always cure where cures are possible. For sale by all druggists.
