A KEY TO THE TROUBLE

County Clerk and Janitor have Worked Themselves Into a Sad State of Nervous Prostration

Their Investigations stayed by Lock-ed Drawer—Fea-pot Tempest Breaks Out and Greatly Agitates Harrison

Where there is trouble, there's alvays a key to it"; and in this case the trouble was the key-or the key was the trouble. Up in the County Council Chamber, in Harrison Hall, is a table for the press, and in that table are two drawers. Those drawers had never been locked, nor was it likely that they ever would be, and whether they would or not was not a matter of moment.

One fine day, however, the enterprising Planet reporter, whilst listening to the learned and soporific debate, suddenly wakened to the fact that he had a key that would fit the drawer. This, thought he, was good; it would enable him to keep his notes and note paper securely stabled, preventing their mysterious d sappearances which had worried him herestories.

All went merry as a Chinese honeymoon until the janitor and the County Clerk, putting their wits together, Escovered that the drawer gether, discovered that the drawer was locked. Straightway a tiny cloud dimmed the blue sky. The County Clerk remark d, with emphasis, that he was responsible for that locked drawer, and if any of the many foreseen and deserved d sasters should be fall the bearer of the key, he would be held responsible. So many heavy responsibilities were his that this of the locked drawer, the weighterest of them all, was greater than he could bear.

The reporter treated the matter as The reporter treated the matter as a joke of too little moment for serious consideration, but the Clerk, amid innumerable cares and worries had still time to be interested and—like G. W. Ross and Irish Jack—insisten. still time to be interested and—like G. W. Ross and Irish Jack—insisten'. The janitor, too, was anxious to gain access to the myster ous drawer. Perhaps, within its dark precincts, amid the paper and pads, reposed a slumbering bomb as full of impossiblities as the local Ross organette's afleged editorials. Perhaps the notes of this G. H. J. were so fiery as to threaten disaster. Perhaps there was another Gamey concealed there, full of dire portent for the Ross misgovernment and the Sullivan maladministration.

"Nobody has the right to carry keys here but me," declared the janitor, "so hand me the key you have."

The promptness of the refusal aimost took his breath away. His realm had been invaded and sacrilege committed at its high altar.

Then the County Clerk took up the matter where the janitor had laid it down. He, too, demanded the key. The reporter, with his customary urbanity, replied, that "forsooth he was willing to unlock the drawer and remove his possessions, but as for the key it was his own and keep it he would."

"You can't tell me that key just happened to fit that look," replied

"You can't tell me that key just happened to fit that lock," replied His Maj-sty with withering scorn. "I don't believe a word of it. I've tried all the keys I could find and they won't fit it."

But the County Council can rest assured that no special session will be necessary to deal with this important question, already in the hands of two such careful and faithful servants,

Moral,

It is rumored that Howat went out canvassing the other day, spent one day at the work, found everybody voting for Bowyer and quit. This recalls the story J. E. Johnson used to tell about Cuba Darr. Cuba had been working up at the mill and stopped suddenly. Mr. Johnson asked him why he wasn't working. "Oh," says Cuba, "I quit." "Why, didn't you like your job?" queried the grooer. "Oh, yes," said Cuba, "but I quit. The boss came around and said, 'Get to h—ll out of here, so I quit.""
