HIS LORDSHIP'S ROMANCE

CHAPTER XXXIII.

To this day, in the great cemetery of Sau Lorenzo, at Rome, people show the grave of the beautiful Jady who died at the Palazzo Giorni, and whose husband sorrowed so deeply that he became ill and nearly lost his life. There is a fair white marble monument, and it tells the age and name of the ill-fated lady who sleeps beneath. Years afterward, when the sad story was fading in men's minds, there came one day to the grave a young English officer. He had travalled from Canada, he said; and the guide who took him to the cemetery saw him lay his head down upon the marble, while deep, bitter sobs shook his frame.

Bertie Bohum never forgot Lady Lynne; no other woman's face ever charmed him. He never spoke of Jove the beautiful, whillant girl, who had remembered his love in the last and most bitter hour of her life.

Never had any event caused a greater sensation than the sudden death of Lord Cynne's young wife. The Palazzo Giorm was thronged with visitors, calliter some shorted that was the Count Rinaldo. She gave orders that, if he called, she into the darkened room where she sat, wished to see him; and he was shown he was pale and agitated.

"Miss Lynne," he auid, in a low voice, of dare hardly ask can this sad news be true?"

"It is true, Count Montalit," she replied. "Who should know better than proper in the wind lay her fire and green proper in the word have be true?"

To this day, in the great cemetery of the backers. Agatha Lynne and the was shown he was pale and agitated.

"Miss Lynne," he auid, in a low voice, of dare hardly ask can this sad news be true?"

To this true, Count Montalit," she replied. "Who should know better than a know of Lynnewoolde. "How much older would be the marbole when he had a long the smooth green law, of Lynne, one morning as they washed along the smooth green law, of Lynne, one morning as they washed along the smooth green law, of Lynne, one morning as they washed along the smooth green law, of Lynne, one morning as they washed along the smooth green law, of Lynn

"It is true, Count Montalti," she replied. "Who should know better than yourself: You hunted her to death. I will give her last message to you, and then never let me see you more. For your own base and cowardly sake, you will keep my poor sister's secret. Its betrayal will harm no one but yourself. She is safe out of the reach of all the harm your slanderous words can do her." He listened while she repeated the words Inez had written. The power of speech seemed to have left him. He had, in his mercenary schemes, pushed his cruelty and persecution too far, and they had recoiled upon himself.

Agatha Lynne spoke but few words to .im; they were what a good spirit might have used, but they were spoken in vain.

fate of the wicked was upon him. where he would, do what he might, face of the girl he had deceived hunted to death haunted him. He everything—he plunged into mad scenes of the wildest dissipation—he sought re-fuge in the haunts of the gay and the worldly; but all in vain. Sleeping or waking, by night or day, he saw that face. There was no oblivion for him. He left Rome before the funeral of Lady Jaynne took blace.

in three years afterward Agatha read in the cone of the French daily journals a short paragraph, which told of the death of Count Rinaldo Montalti. He died stabbed in a quarrel which took place in the Parisian gambling-house, and Lady Lynne was avenged.

After her interview with him was ended, and he had left her presence frightened and subdued, Agatha went to the room where her siter lay. She knelt by her side, and kissed the cold lips, murmuring the while that she had done her bidding and would keep her secret well. Agatha never gazed upon that beautiful face again; it was soon hidden from all eyes.

It was on a bright sunny day that Lady Lyune was laid to rest in the cemetery of San Lorenzo. Those who saw Lord Lynne then barely recognized him; he could not recover from the shock. He could not recover from the shock he could not nedure the sight or the name of the place where he had lost her. Two days after the funeral heleft Rome, and went, he hardly knew whither.

Society had received a shock in the death of its most brilliant ornament. But no stranger perhaps felt more sympathy with the bereaved household than did good Mrs. Cadwell. She discussed the event in all its bearings with Mrs. Godwin, who had changed places with her, and was now patronized instead of of patronizing.

There were mourning and lamentation in the old Hall of Lynnewolde when the tragic fate of its young mistress was known. Mrs. Lynne grieved over the sad ending of the young life that had promised so fairly ard so well.

It was at Alexandria that Lord Lynne became so dangeronsly ill that his life was despaired of. Then Sir Allan, like a true frierd, went to the rescue, and nursed him through the long and tedious malady, and at his urgent requisit went with him to the east. But it was not without some sacrifice that Sir Allan Leigh did this. He had hoped, when the year of mourning expired, to make Agatha his wife; but she asked him to wait. She did not regain her spirits; the secret she kept weighed her down. After the funeral, Agatha and Lady Florence came home. Evelyn returned to the Chase and life went on slowly and sadly until Sir Allan was summoned to Alexandria. Then they had the fever of suspense to pass through, Lystras were looked for with a sickening arxiety, until the news came that the beloved son and brother was recovering. He could not return home, he said to be looked from that the beloved son and brother was recovering.

were looked for with a sickening arxiety, until the news came that the beloved son and brother was recovering. He could not return home, he said; he should go to the east, and Sir Allan iwould go with him. When he had learned to forget, he would return to Lyane-wolde.

The years of his absence were dult ones to the ladies at the Hall. Lady Florence had, by Lord Lynne's advice, consented to receive a small income from the Wyerne estate. Mrs. Lynne had grown warmly attached to her, and would never hear of her leaving Lynne-wolde. She was sister and companion to Agatha, and filled the place of the bettered one they lost.

Agatha, and filled the place of the be-loved one they lost.

People wondered, why Agatha Lynne did not recover her health and spitas.

It must have been a dreadful shock, they said, for she had never been the same since. And she never was quite the same. She could not forget; the sad life and death of that beautiful; brilliant sitter were ever before her; the words People wondered, why Agatha Lyune did not recover her health and spirits. It must have been a dreadful shock, they said, for she had never been the same since. And she never was quite the same. She could not forget; the sad life and death of that beautiful; brilliant sister were ever before her; the words of that last letter semed ever in her mind. If she could have shared ner seere with Allan, it would have weigied less beavily upon her; but that she could not do. She never betrayed her trust, although for many years it slouded and shadowed her life. The faintest shadow of doubt was never thrown upon the fair name of Inex, Lady Lyune.

The first happy event that dawned war the marriage of Evelyn Leigh, Somewhat to the amusement and surprise of Agatha, her friend made, during a visit to London, the conquest of her old admirer, the Marquis of Hortington. It was Evelyn's great likeness and same of her old admirer, the Marquis of Hortington. A fine, handsome boy, the heir of Lynnewolde, was trying to make his little sister ride upon the dog, but the child resisted.

Then years afterward, Lady Leigh would have seamining a 38-tone Lynne, now was the the had even of the head of the great chestnut, with Lady would have weak and in a critical condition.

Lord and Lady Hortington were very happy. He thought no one in the wide world was so beautiful or so clever as his gay, pretty little wife; and she, with her good, clear sense, and quick, bright intellect, helped him to fill his responsible position with great credit. There are not many happier people in the world than Evelyn and her husband.

Once, after her return to England, Agatia heard of the Cadwells. Julia married—and married, every one said, "remarkably well." They sent cards to Florence and Agatha, who replied by a kind letter of congratulation. They have seen nothing of them since. Maria remained an old maid. She still speaks of the great glory of her life—the time "Lady Florence visited them at Rome," and her friends listen in wonder and awe.

as they walked along the smooth green lawn of Lynnewolde. "How much older and wiser we are then when we left here for London on that bright spring morning! I never thought so much sor-row lay before us."

"Four years is a long time when one is young," replied Mrs. Lynne; "even to me, each year has seemed an age. I have longed so earnestly to see my son again."

she would be his wife.

Old times seemed to have come back to Lynnewolde. When Agatha married Allan Leigh she laid aside her sadness—she would not grieve him. Lady Florence was bright and animated. Lord Lynne looked happy once more. Yet on this wedding day, in the midst of happiness and festivity, they thought of the brillant, beautiful lady who had once been queen of the old hall.

Agatha went home with her husband to the Chase, and there is no happier wife in the world than Lady Leigh. Her husban diddizes her. He calls her his pearl, his treasure beyond price; and if he sees at times a look of sadness stealing over her face he charms it away. In the old picture-gallery at Lynnewolde there hangs a portrait that, when the family are away, visitors flock to see. It is that of a beautiful lady with a lovely southern face and dark, almond see. It is that of a beautiful lady with a lovely southern face and dark, almond eyes—a smile half parts the rich, red lips, and masses of waving hair flow over the white shoulders.

"And that," says the visitor, "is Lady Inez Lynne, the lady who died in Rome." "Yes," replied the housekeeper; "and this is my lord's second wife, Lady Florence Lynne."

Then she turns to the portrait of a golden-haired English lady, whose e-x quisite face and violet eyes tell of hap-

STRUGGLE FOR CONGO ANNEXA

Belgians in Favor of Taking Over the Free State, But Opposed to Accept-ing Leopold's Offer-Attempt to Brussels, Jan. 14.—The opening seswas held to-day. M. Schollaert, the newly-appointed Premier, in defining the policy of the Government, intimated the necessity of concessions by King Leopoid in the matter of the Congo before annexation would be possible. His speech is interpreted as meaning the King eventually will permit the elimination from the present Congo treaty of the objectionable, features regarding the Crown domain.

The Premier drew attention to the fact that the recent Government report made out the Congo Independent State to be richer in minerals and rubber than had been supposed. The entire Belgian nation favored annexation and the opening of the Congo to civilization, outing of the Congo to civilization, but the majority of the people were opposed to the terms of the present treaty.

It is expected that the Parliamentary commission will now endorse the acceptable features of the treaty, but reject it as a whole. After this, and without com-

"Will he be much altered, do you think?" asked Agatha; "and, oh, auntie, will he have forgotten her?"

"No." said Mrs. Lynne, "my poor boy will never forget her; but he is young and naturally light-hearted. I have great hopes for him. I trust you to see him settled at Lynnewolde, a happy husband, with children growing around him, for he has suffered enough."

"But not so bitterly as I have done," thought the young girl to herself.

"They will be here this evening." continued Mrs. Lynne, "and we must give them a grand reception."

When evening came, and a tall bronzed man, with saddened eyes, stood before her once again, Mrs. Lynne was perfectly happy. No one could look at Lord Lynne without seeing that he had suffered acutely; but "four years is a long time when one is young," and the anaguish of his pai nwas over now. He would never forget the beautiful girl who had loved him so passionately, but life had slid many blessings in store for him.

Fireman Anderson said the firemen were sober. He slipped on the side-walk and his elbow broke the window.

S. Osaki, reporter of a Japanese paper, said the accused, Murato, came to his room the following morning and declared the deed was done by him. A fellow boarder with Osaki corroborated this, and the other Japanese prisoners testified against Murato.
