When the ill-fated party left the dance there were several other people in the sleigh. Mrs. Burke and Arthur Wentworth got out a short distance away from the track, and this left, besides the seven unfortunate ones in the sleigh, a young man named Oliver Cowell. He lives a short distance away from the railway, and Wilson was going to stop about 100 feet from the track to let him out.

about 100 feet from the track to let him out.

"Don't stop, I'll jump out," said Cowell, and he suited the occasion to the word and jumped from the swiftly moving sleigh. If the sleigh had stopped for possibly one instant to let this young man out, the accident would have been averted. The narrow escape of Cowell also in not going on with the party is apparent, as he could have reached his house as easily from beside the track as from where he chose to alight.

The pall-bearers were: Wilfred Henderson, John Dwyer, Robert Morrison, William and Duncan Morrison and Robert Moore.

The last sad rites were held over the remains of Walter Geo, Greathead in Hamilton Cemetery this morning, the funeral taking place at 10.30 o'clock from his son's residence, 49 Burlington street west, to St. Luke's Church, where a service was conducted by Rev. E. N. R. Burns, who also officiated at the grave.

The remains of Mrs. Maria Elwell were laid at rest in Hamilton Cemetery this afternoon. The funeral took place at 2 o'clock from her daughter's residence, 172 Catharine street north. Rev. Canon Sutherland conducted the services at the house and grave. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

The chief thereupon informed the railroad peeple that if they wished to burn cars they must first notify him and also get a permit from the Bureau of Combustibles, which would detail two men to superintend the work and also watch the fire alarm boxes.

Now after a car is condemned it is sent to the repair shops and dismantled of all movable fittings. It is then put aboard a flatcar and run out to the 'graveyard' by the wrecking train. When it arrives there it is lifted off the flatcar by the wrecker's derrick and then set afire. Two firemen look on and see that no one rushes to the fire boxes.

There was a time once when the railroad gave people living in the neighborhood permission to chop np the cars and use the wood as fuel, but more of the iron went than the wood and the permission was revoked. The next morning after the cars are burned railroad employees sift the abset for the iron which mission was revoked. The next morning after the cars are burned railroad em ployees sift the ashes for the iron, which the railroad disposes of.
