IVANHOE.

Rebecca, thus endowed with knowledge as with beauty, was universally revered and admired by her own tribe, who almost regarded her as one of those gifted women mentioned in the sacred history. Her father himselt, out of reverence for her talents, which involuntorily mingled itself with his un-bounded affection, permitted the waiden a greater liberty than was usually indulged to those of her sex ly the habits of her people, and was, as we have just seen, frequently guided by her opinion, even in preference to his own.

When Ivanhoe reached the habitation of Isaac, he was still in a state of unconsciousness, owing to the profuse loss of blood which had taken place during his exertions in the lists. Rebecca examined the wound, and having applied to it such vulnerary remedies as her art prescribed, informed her father that if fever could be averted, of which the great bleeding rendered her CHOICE HAVANA CIGARS little apprehensive, and if the healing balsam of Miriam retained its virtue, there was nothing to fear for his guest's life, and that he might with safety travel to York with them on the ensuing day. Isaac looked a little blank at this annunciation. His charity would willingly have stopped short at Ashby, or at most would have left the wounded christain to be tended in the house where he was residing at present, with an assurance to the Hebrew to whom it belonged that all expenses should be duly discharged. To this, however, Rebecca opposed many reasons of which we shall only mention two that had peculiar weight with Isaac The one was, that she could on no account put the phial of precious balsam into the hands of another physician even of her own tribe. lest that valuable mystery should The subscriber takes this method of be discovered; the other, that this expressing his thanks to his numerous friends who during Forty-two years of business in this city have stood by him so loyally and well, where the stood by him case the monarch should return, Isaac, who had supplied his brother John with treasure to prosecute his rebellious purposes, would stand in no small need of a powerful pro-STOVES. tector who enjoyed Richard's

Rebecca,' said Isaac, giving way to with the times and have ever been willing to recognize the merits of good, honest workmanship, the secrets of the blessed Miriam, -assuredly they should be preserved to those to whom Providence has vouchsafed them. And him whom the Nazarenes of England call the Lion's Heart, assuredly it were better for me to tall into the hands of a strong lion of Idumea than into his, if he shall have got assurance of my dealings with his brother. Wherefore I will lend ear to thy counsel, and this youth shall journey with us unto York, and our house shall be as a home to him until his wounds shall be healed. And if he of the Lion Heart shall return to the land, as is now noised & Anderson's abroad, then shall this Wilfred of Ivanhoe be unto me as a wall of defence, when the King's displeasure shall burn high against thy father. And if he does not return, this Wilfred may repay us our charges. when he shall gain treasure by the strength of his arm and of his good spear, even as he did yesterday and this day also. 'Thou art speaking, but sooth,

It was not until evening was nearly closed that Ivanhoo was restored to consciousness of his situation. He awoke from a broken slumber, under the confused impressions which are naturally attendant on the recovery from a state of insensibility. He was unable for some time to recall exactly to his memory the circumstances which had preceded his fall in the lists, or to make out any connected chain of the events in which he had been engaged upon the yesterday. A sense of wounds and injury, joined to great weakness and exhaustion, was mingled with the recollection of blows dealt and received, and of Parties desirous of purchasing either steeds rushing upon each other, overthrowing and overthrown; of shouts and clashing of arms, and all the heady tumult of a confused An effort to draw aside the cur-
