Passed Its Second Reading.

Special Evening Telegram. LONDON, This Morning.

The Welsh Dis-establishment Bill passed its second reading last night by a vote of 348 to 267. During the course of the debate Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George effectively used the charge that the noble families, whose representatives were the most strenuous opponents of the bill on the grounds that it pillaged the Established Church, obtained their vast wealth by spoliation of the Church at the time of the Reformation. A stormy scene followed his reference to a political leaflet, in which he said the Duke of Devonshire charged the Government with robbery from God. "Doesn't he know," queried Lloyd George, "that the very foundation of his fortunes were laid deep in sacrilege; built on desecrated shrines and pillaged altars?" Among the voices raised in angry protest Lord Hugh Cecil's was the most conspicuous. To this the Chancellor retorted, "These charges that we are robbing the Church ought not to be brought in by those whose family tree is laden with the fruits of sacrilege. At the Reformation their ancestors robbed the Catholic Church Monasteries, altars and alms homes; robbed the poor; robbed the dead. Now, when we try to recover some part of the pillaged property for our poor descendants, they accuse us of theft—they whose hands are still dripping with the fat of sacrilege."

KINGS ON THE QUIET.

Odd Things Sometimes Happen when Royalty Travels "Incog."

The Prince of Wales, who has gone to stay in Paris in order to improve his French, has adopted an incognito. Paris knows him simply as the Earl of Chester.

Though this is his first such experience, it will certainly not be his last. All modern Royalties, with two exceptions, find an incognito at times an absolute necessity. It is only the Tsar and the Kaiser who have always refused to veil their identity, however thinly.

The disguise of an incognito is usually very thin indeed. Every lady knew, for instance, when the Duke of Lancaster was travelling, that the owner of this title was King Edward. But incognitos serve two purposes. When a Sovereign or Prince travels merely "incognito" he simply means to save brother Royalties and himself the trouble and expense of State visits. He prefers to see them informally.

A Princess as Miss Jones.

But when the phrase a "strict incognito" is used, it is a request to be left in absolute privacy. Queen Alexandra has often travelled as the Duchess of Lancaster, but she has also paid flying visits to Paris under the strict incognito of Mrs. Stephens. Princess Victoria, too, has stayed there as plain Miss Jones.

Our present King and Queen has seldom found incognitos necessary, and never since they came to the Throne. But when the Duchess of York, Queen Mary frequently travelled as the Countess of Killarney.

King Edward had quite a large selection of incognitos. When Prince of Wales he usually preferred to appear abroad as the Earl of Chester, the Earl of Carrick, Baron Renfrew, or the Earl of Cornwall. As these titles attach to that of the Prince of Wales when he became King he abandoned them for that of the Duke of Lancaster.

Too Zealous for King Edward. Sometimes excessive zeal on the part of the police tends to defeat the object of the incognito and draw attention to the Royalty who wishes to be let alone. King Edward when a Prince was often troubled in this way. Once when in Naples he was annoyed by the constant presence of two detectives.

Sending for the chief of police, he invited him to bring his men into the Royal sitting room. Offering them cigars, he gave them a good-humoured lecture on the way in which their work ought to have been done. And ended with:

"I don't like your clearing people out of my way when I want to go anywhere. I don't mind being a Prince. I do seriously to being troubled as an epidemic disease!" And the crestfallen police retired to ponder more tactful methods.

"Bring Out Your Handcuffs!"

King Alfonso, who used to travel as the Marquis of Cavadonga, had the same fault to find with the French police. When staying at Biarritz once he made it his daily amusement to try to dodge them. After a vain attempt one day on the golf course to baffle his shadowers, he turned suddenly back and held out his wrists, remarking:

"If it is the Marquis of Cavadonga you want I am here. Bring out your handcuffs. My only prayer is that you may never know the tortures that bring a murderer's soul, as I do!"

King Edward used often to talk of the little incidents that happened when he travelled incog. Strolling through the Louvre once with an equerry he noticed a couple of Americans who kept turning from the pictures to eye him furtively.

At last one of the two, a lean, elderly man with a goatee beard, came up and asked squarely:

"Sir, are you the Prince of Wales?" "My name is Renfrew," was the genial answer.

The American muttered bitterly: "Confound you, young man, you've lost me twenty dollars!" and stalked off disconsolate.

Try a 5 cent bottle of "Staford's Prescription 'A'" and take according to directions on the bottle and be cured of Indigestion and Dyspepsia. may9,tt.
