"Queen Professor" Enraged by Comment.

Lord Mersey Declared He Did Not Believe University Man's Statement.

London, July 1.—With the object of eliciting further information regarding some questions submitted to the British Board of Trade in the Lusitania inquiry, Baron Mersey held another public hearing today.

Professor Marichal, of Queen's University, Kingston, Ont., who stated he was a retired officer of the French army, created a diversion by complaining of the treatment accorded to rescued passengers of the Lusitania by the Cunard Company. He alleged the survivors had the greatest difficulty in obtaining dry clothes, food, accommodation or transportation.

Professor Marichal also stated that the second explosion on the ship resembled the sound which would be caused by ammunition, "like a machine gun." He also charged the company with indifference to the interests of passengers in carrying a dangerous cargo and criticized the manner of conducting rescue work.

Counsel of the Cunard Line then read a letter written by Professor Marichal to the company after the disaster in which the writer asked that cash be advanced on his lost baggage or he would give evidence "not to the credit of the Company or the Admiralty."

"Doesn't that imply you wanted money to keep your mouth closed?" asked Baron Mersey.

The witness explained that he meant he would bring a separate action, apart from the inquiry unless he was paid, but he denied he remained silent at the inquiry for that reason.

"I don't believe you," declared Lord Mersey.

The witness expressed indignation at such an interpretation of the letter, but the presiding officer was unyielding, and the professor left the stand in high anger.

One of the objects of re-opening the inquiry was for the purpose of reviewing the testimony relative to the state of collapsible boats. The evidence regarding these boats was simply technical as to whether they were capable of being used, and if the skin had been removed, Lord Mersey said the particular evidence he desired was whether the grips and lashings were loosed, the evidence regarding which was contradictory, but an expert stated if the lashings had been loose the boats would have floated from the deck when the ship sank.

Carpenter Robinson on being re-examined, said that he himself had removed the lashings on eight lifeboats, and saw that the remainder was being attended to by stewards. He believed all the boats floated after the ship sank.

Capt. Turner, on being called, was asked whether there were Canadian or other troops aboard the vessel. He replied promptly: "None whatever."

A Board of Trade expert testified that a distance of 150 feet, with two bulkheads, separated the hold where the empty shell cases were stowed and the nearest point struck by the torpedo.

This testimony ended the inquiry.

King Victor a Friend of His Soldiers.

Endears Himself to Them by His Kindly Actions and Personal Interest.

Breslau, July 5.—Little by little, from passing soldiers and from the wounded in the hospitals, it is possible to realize the life of King of Italy is leading among his soldiers—a life of simplicity, sympathy and courage.

His days are spent almost entirely in his little gray automobile, which is becoming almost legendary. It moves so rapidly from one place to another. The soldiers are already saying it brings luck, for their attacks are always specially successful when the King and his motor are nearby.

Nobody can say where the King sleeps, as his hardy upbringing make it possible for him to take the few hours' rest required wherever he finds himself—in a tent, hut, soldier's bivouac on a mattress of straw, or merely wrapped in his cloak. He has all the calm, instinctive courage for which the House of Savoy is noted. He is constantly where real fighting is going on, encouraging the men by his presence and seeing that every detail is working smoothly.

King Victor often leaves his motor and moves about familiarly among the troops. He talks little and simply, looking the men keenly in the eyes as he speaks. He knows almost every officer by name, and has the royal gift of never forgetting a face once seen. Meeting a soldier of the Alpini, he said:

"It was you who took me up," (naming a peak the King had ascended in order to see all the details of an action then occurring.)

The soldier answered, "Yes, your Majesty."

The King added, "That was a good day. We were pretty close to the firing."

He passed on, while the soldier related rapturously how the King took him as a guide, outdistancing the generals and other officers accompanying him, spent a long time on the top of the mountain studying the scene, then descending, shared his simple meal of cold meat, cheese, chocolate and bread with the soldier, insisting on his having the larger share because "at 22 years one has a large appetite." The soldier ended by saying: "There isn't one of us who wouldn't die a thousand deaths to protect him."

One day when near the field of battle, the King saw a wounded Bersagliere, his leg almost severed from his body, who, when carried by, feebly tried to salute him, saying as he pointed to his wound, "For you, Majesty."

The King, gravely and tenderly saluting him, answered:

"No, my boy, for our Italy."

Another time, seeing a soldier sitting sadly apart, he asked him the reason of his dejection. The man replied: "When I felt home my youngest child was very ill, and I have had no news."

The King said:

"I can sympathize with you, for I myself am a father, and it is a whole week since I have heard from my family. You must believe that no news is good news," but taking the man's name and address he ordered a member of the staff to telegraph at once and inquire how the child was progressing.

It is by such actions and his unflinching interest in the soldiers that makes them so passionately devoted to their King.

HOW TO RELAX FOR BEAUTY.

Lie down flat on the floor with a folded blanket under you. Relax every muscle in the body and lie perfectly still for a few seconds.

Raise first one leg and let it drop as though you had no power over it, and then do the same with the other. Rest a moment, putting your muscles in a state of tension again. Then do the same exercise with the arms. Rest again with tension and then stand on your feet and hands and kick out backwards, first with one foot and then with the other. Do this about a dozen times. Then walk around the room on your hands and feet.

When you have completed the circuit of the room, stand erect, throw your shoulders back and start the blood racing through the upper part of your body, by thrusting your arms first up, then sideways and then down repeating this exercise with vigor and energy until the muscles are tired.

This exercise should leave your cheeks rosy with color and your eyes shining. If you find, however, that your lips do not look quite as fresh and soft and pink as you would like to have them, a dainty way of making them as sweet as a baby's is to bathe them in milk and rose leaves. This is a famous recipe which has been handed down for generations among the feminine members of the French nobility.

GERMAN SUBMARINE BASE.

Paris, July 10.—A telegram from Athens says that passengers arriving at the Piræus from the Island of Imbros declare that the Kaiser's famous villa at Achilleon, on the Island of Corfu, has been transformed into a supply base for the German submarines, which are now operating in force in the Aegean.

BANISH BILE!

A bilious condition of the system is the result of inaction of the liver, often causing severe headache through the eyes and temples, eliminating sometimes in nausea and vomiting, which is frequently followed by a bilious diarrhoea.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, when taken as directed, stimulates the hepatic glands of the stomach and increases the contraction of its muscles from above downward. This action is communicated to the intestines and increases the flow of the intestinal juice, thus stimulating the ducts of the liver to pour out the bile, when it can be carried downward by the laxative action of the Salt, instead of remaining to clog up the liver and flow back into the stomach.

Thus, if a person who is subject to Biliousness and Bilious Headache will use Abbey's Effervescent Salt, the natural action of the Stomach, Liver and Intestines will be kept up and no bile can accumulate in the system.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST—SHOSHONE FALLS.

By GEORGE FITCH,

Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

No collection of water in the world is more inspiring to look at than the Shoshone Falls. Yet they are among the most poorly patronized of all our great natural wonders.

This is due partly to the poor advertising they have received. Any one with adjectives to splutter over waterfalls has rushed to Niagara and has used them there. In the second place, these falls have suffered greatly from lack of transportation facilities. To be a success, a waterfall must have transportation facilities just like a gum factory. Victoria Falls in Central Africa are overpoweringly grand, but due to the poor train service, they are not as well known in this country as the Minnehaha trickle.

The Shoshone Falls are located in the undiscovered bottom of Idaho, where all the water available is monopolized by the Snake River. Formerly the tourist had to load himself into a hack and travel thirty miles over country as smooth and placid as a storm at sea in order to view them. Now, however, he can leave the main line of the Union Pacific and travel very close to them before he is compelled to Ford it.

The Shoshone Falls are produced by the Snake River, a dark, mysterious stream which unwaters the south of Idaho and does many remarkable things on its journey to the Columbia. Thirty miles south of Shoshone station while flowing placidly along through a canyon 1,200 feet deep and 750 feet wide, it suddenly falls off a ledge of rock with a great crash. It continues to fall over precipices and rocks with a vast uproar, until it finally makes a plunge of 210 feet into a stupendous pool lined with rock walls five times as high as those of Niagara. People who have seen this performance declare that it is second only to that of the Niagara River in daring and impressiveness.

After the Snake River has recovered from its descent it continues through a canyon 1,000 feet deep on its turbulent way, leaving the spectators stunned and spray-spattered. No one can see this waterfall without remaining its firm friend for life. Shoshone Falls have succumbed to civilization and are now compelled to irrigate the vicinity and to provide power for southern Idaho. Its harness is not visible like that of Niagara, however, and it still thunders on in weird and lonely grandeur.

LONDON

LONDON, June 29th, 1915.

THE PRINCE OF WALES' MAJORITY.

The Prince of Wales coming of age on June 23rd is one of the hundred of interesting national incidents which have lost public importance through the war. The Prince has now been at the front since November 16th, so he has seen half a year's active service—the only Prince of Wales who has done so since Stuart times. One would say at a venture that Charles II. was the last instance of the kind. Many stories have come through of the Prince's life at the front, of his clever driving of a motor car, of his cheery relations with wounded soldiers, of his eagerness to see and learn all that he can, and his anxiety to do all that is possible for a staff officer of his age and experience to attempt. The unassuming giving of himself to do whatever was before him in work and play has been characteristic of this young Prince since his earliest days. This quality and unflinching cheerfulness have naturally made him esteemed and liked by the army, but report says that the officers who are mainly concerned with him have been less appreciative of his eagerness for movement and danger, however much unofficially they may have agreed with it. The responsibility of having the Heir Apparent in the danger zone is a considerable one, with one conceives many human difficulties, but I believe that many anxieties entertained at the beginning have proved groundless, and that the Prince's presence, which was always personally welcome, is now considered an accession in many ways. With the Prince himself the experience he is now undergoing in facing like so many of his future subjects the realities of life and death at this early age, must be valuable in the making of the man who in a legitimate sense began his existence on June 23rd.

ROSE DAY.

Rose Day fell on the first sunless day for weeks, and on the 23rd June the spread of pink in the baskets of the sellers and in every buttonhole was very cheering. Everyone had a rose, from Lord Kitchener, who was tucked on the steps of the War Office down to the sewerman who on crawling through a manhole into the light day was promptly captured. Lloyd George was surrounded by sellers inside his office in Whitehall. Garfield had to confess he had no rose in his pocket. With all his famous amiability he went back into his office and raised a loan for the occasion. It was the most general or
