INNER TOMB OF EGYPTIAN KING

Unveils Up It's Secrets—Seals Set on Granite Door 3,000 Years Ago. What Will Be Found?

STORY OF DISCOVERY.

It is considered to be the greatest discovery in the annals of Egyptology was made last autumn in the valley of the tombs of the kings. Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Carter, after a long and costly search, during which hope, although never entirely abandoned, was very dim at times. The tomb lies directly beneath the well known tomb of Rameses IX, which had been explored long ago. It was only by deduction that its location was ascertained.

In the valley of the tombs of the kings, leading at right angles to the Nile. It was selected by the architects of the earlier dynasties, behind the practice of building pyramids and introducing the idea of oblique secure resting places for the dead. Their hopes were in vain. The location of the buried treasures and the hidden riches of robbers, who soon exacted tribute of the royal treasures. In many cases the guards were in league with the thieves. One after the other, the tombs were broken into and plundered. The despoilation has been terrific and the loss to archaeology incalculable.

WEAK, RUN DOWN AND AILING

Dr. E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Brought Relief When Other Medicines Failed

“I look Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was tired and run down. I had headaches and no appetite and was troubled for two years with sleeplessness. I tried many medicines, but nothing did me any real good. While I was living in Washington I was recommended by a stranger to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am stronger and feel better since then and am able to do my real work. I am willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial.”—Mrs. C. GRAYES, Fort Mann, B. C.

“I look Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was weak and run down and had backache and all sorts of aches which women have. I found relief when taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I also found strength from the Vegetable Compound. I am doing all I can to help other women.”—Mrs. A. F. HARRISON, Carpenter Street, Keene, N. H.

It is now many years since Lord Carnarvon began to devote his time and attention to a considerable sum of money annually to the excavation of ancient sites in Egypt. He has succeeded in clearing up a considerable number of smaller archaeological points and the antiquities which he has brought to light have greatly increased our knowledge of Egyptian decorative art and literature. He has unearthed temples and tombs. For years he has been steadily digging out the ancient portions of the Theban necropolis, where queens and princes and princesses of the second Theban empire were buried. He also discovered the tomb which had been prepared for Queen Hatsheput, with its marvelous sarcophagus of yellow crystalline limestone.

HIS REIGN SHORT.

Our knowledge of the life and deeds of this king is small. His reign cannot have lasted more than six years; but he is extremely important as showing that while he was on the throne the famous heresy of the disc or sun worshippers came to an end.

HOW TO FIND IT.

For many years Egyptologists have felt that there must be a very considerable body of evidence lying buried in the famous valley. The problem was how to find it.

Home-made, but Has No Equal for Coughs

“If you have a severe cough of chest cold accompanied with soreness, throat tickle, hoarseness, or difficulty breathing, or if your child wakes up during the night with cough and you want quick help, try this reliable old home-made cough remedy. Any drug store can supply you with 1/2 ounce of Elixir. Put this into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey or corn syrup instead of sugar syrup, if desired. This recipe makes 16 ounces of really remarkable cough remedy. It tastes good, and in spite of its low cost, it may be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief. You can feel this takes hold of a cough in a way that means business. It loosens and raises the phlegm, stops throat tickle and soothes and heats the irritated membranes that line the throat and bronchial tubes with such promptness, ease and certainty that it is really astonishing.

VAQUE TRADITIONS.

Mr. Carter has for many years had suspicions—in fact, more than suspicions—that other royal tombs remained unopened in the valley; and this opinion was shared by aged natives on the west bank of the Nile, who had very good reasons for holding it.

HUMAN TOUCH.

A curiously human touch occurs in the discovery of utensils filled with food for the refreshment of the dead king during his journey to the underworld. He was not alone in this matter, for the British Museum possesses the black wooden box containing the mummified pigeons and other birds provided for the lunch of Rameses III in the tomb.

up bloodless sacrifices and burnt incense, and promulgated views about the existence of Aten, which was practically monotheistic.

The whole of the powerful priesthood of Amen-Ra were his foes and as he was virtually shut off from the government of the country in his isolated city, the foreign possessions of Egypt in Syria and elsewhere were lost.

There is scarcely a more pathetic figure in ancient history than the obscure and obscure Egyptian possessions in Syria and Palestine appealing for help to this religious fanatic, who, through his impractical ideas of government, lost his throne, but amused himself by burning incense and singing hymns to a god whom the rest of the country refused to worship, and with the care of his large family of daughters.

THROWS OFF CULT.

Tut-Ankh-Amen succeeded him to the throne with the daughter of Amenhotep IV, but very soon after he began to reign he saw that the cult of Aten was doomed. He promptly eliminated the name of Aten from his own title and that of his wife, and moved his capital back to Thebes.

There he proceeded at once to undo the evil which his father-in-law had perpetrated on the city. In a very short time the city of Akhetnaten was deserted and fell into ruin and the old worship of Amen was set on a firmer basis than ever before, if possible, by Tut-Ankh-Amen.

Lord Carnarvon's discoveries will no doubt throw a great light upon the reign of Tut-Ankh-Amen and on the continuation of the artistic development. It is clear, from the large amount of funerary furniture that has been found that the old cult was observed in great detail, but there are many other objects mentioned which await further examination.

The two great statues are undoubtedly figures made for the King, or “double,” of the deceased monarch, in which it was supposed to dwell after leaving this world in a great tomb. Having two, it might have lived in first one and then the other, to vary the monotony of residence in one place for 3000 years.

A curiously human touch occurs in the discovery of utensils filled with food for the refreshment of the dead king during his journey to the underworld. He was not alone in this matter, for the British Museum possesses the black wooden box containing the mummified pigeons and other birds provided for the lunch of Rameses III in the tomb.

It is disappointing, of course, that the thieves in ancient days succeeded in carrying off much of the jewelry that was undoubtedly part of the king. But, after all, there is a great deal of jewelry in the museums at Cairo and elsewhere, and many students will rejoice more over the discovery of these funerary appliances than they would over ornaments of gold or precious stones.

Curiosity was whetted over the statement in the original report of the discovery of a box of papyrus, apparently manuscripts, which might be unrolled and deciphered. Unfortunately, however, a closer examination shows that the supposed papyrus rolls are, in reality, rolls of cloth.

The mouth of the tomb lies almost in the centre of the valley and the passages and chambers composing it are cut, as they were, obliquely into one of the low hills rising from the narrow floor of the valley to the enclosing limestone cliffs on the north side. The low tomb of Rameses IX.

Beyond a wide doorway, formerly blocked up, the passage 2 feet long and 8 1/2 feet high, and of the same width as the stair. Then, through another doorway similar to the first, lies the first chamber, 12 by 26 feet, and 8 1/2 feet high. It was this chamber that the explorers first entered and found so packed with articles and material, even to the very door, that one Egyptologist was moved to exclaim: “We never knew the ancient Egyptians before!”

This remarkable discovery, the most sensational of the century, is the reward of patience, perseverance and perseverance. For more than 16 years Lord Carnarvon, with the assistance of Howard Carter, has been carrying out excavations on that part of the site of ancient Thebes situated on the west bank of the Nile, at Luxor.

Seven years ago, work was started in the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings. For a long time the excavators had little success. The work was exceedingly costly and Lord Carnarvon is reported, on several occasions, to have contemplated abandoning it. But Mr. Carter was possessed of some sixth sense that insisted that somewhere, in that mound of rubbish, was the long-lost tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen. He insisted and entreated to be allowed to continue.

The search was prosecuted systematically and, at last, the dogged perseverance of Mr. Carter, his thoroughness and his faith were rewarded by the discovery which has set the scientific world in a flame.

St. Patrick's Day and Royalty.

On Saturday, March 17, 1890, being the Festival of St. Patrick, apostle and reputed patron-saint of Ireland, and noble descent, and born in Scotland; but having engaged in an inland life of England of Scots and Picts—probably that of A.D. 411—he was captured and sold as a slave into Ireland. Pitying his religious condition, he afterwards returned, at his own desire, to convert its inhabitants to Christianity. It is said that the shamrock, or trefoil—each of which names signified “three-leafed”—was selected by him as a symbol of the Trinity, or God invisible in himself, or manifested, as in Christ, or operating in and around man, though unseen as the Spirit, being nevertheless one and the same. “The wearing of the green,” as it is called, by soldiers had been objected to by military authorities as interfering with the uniformity of their official costume, and his prohibition had often roused irritation. But in 1800, when Queen Victoria was intending to visit her son, the Duke of Connaught, then the Commander-in-Chief of her army in Ireland, she shortly before this Saint's day, issued an order that Irish soldiers might in turn wear a sprig of shamrock in their head-dresses on this their national festival. Needless to say, it was celebrated in London and throughout the Empire as never before, and the ailments to the soldiers.
