EUROPEAN TRAVELERS. YALUABLE INFORMATION FOR THOSE

GOING ABROAD THIS SUMMER.

▲ Compendium of Useful Information For European Travelers Compiled Expressly for the Inexperienced-Cures for Sea-Sickness—Cost of the Trip and Hints on Baggage and Other Things.

The passenger lists of European steamship, lines will this summer be pientifully sprinkled with the names of Canadian people. Many of these are about to make the trip for the first time, and they naturally look forward to it with some daynes of apprehamsion, as well as with some degree of apprehension, as well as with great joy. They ply all their friends and acquaintances that have made the tour with innumerable questions and receive in the end as what the end so much contradictory advice that they are quite upset and bewildered before they even cross the gangplank to the steam-

they even cross the gangpuana er's deck.
For the benefit of all such inexperienced ones a little manual, a "Compendium of Useful Information for European Travelers," has been compiled, which it is hoped will prove of incalculable value in all the dilemmas and quandaries incident to a journey in Europe. It is suggested that the intending traveler cut out this article and paste it on raveler cut out this article and pastel to on the inside of the lid of his trunk. If, however, he feels a vague suspicion that he may be invalidated from raising the lid of his trunk during the sea voyage, it might be better to pin the article to the wall near his berth, where his languid eye may drink hope and consolation from it in his brief periods of respite from torture.

As to seasickness: The only absolute preventive is coming ashore before the ship

Ventive is coming ashore before the ship starts. This has never been known to fail when followed in time. The means of prevention most fashionable this spring is the porcus plaster. The directions are to wear one on the back and another over the disturbed gastric region until religious. turbed gastric region until relief comes. The relief comes 24 hours after landing. Another specific, and a cheaper one, is the inspirational remedy. When you feel the first squalms, stand erect on the deck, and breathe carefully in unison with 'the ship's motion. When she sinks, empty the lungs gently; when she rises, inhale. This prescription has never yet prayented secretaries. rises, inhale. This prescription has never yet prevented seasickness, but, like patent medicine, it may prove effectual with some medicine, it may prove effectual with some individual of a generation yet unborn. Still another expensive recipe is the newspaper. Carefully fold a newspaper and wear it over the gastric region, next the skin. If this does not do anything else it will provide diversion for your fellow voyagers during the first few hours voyagers during the first few hours out, for whenever you move you will make every audible crackling. The principle disadvantage about the newspaper preventive is that you become alarmingly ill before you can take the thing off, and are compelled to lie in your berth in agony during the remainder of the voyage and listen to the crackling and rattling of the medicine, while you call down wrath on those who deduced you into trying it. Some care should luded you into trying it. Some care should be used in selecting a newspaper, as some seem to accelerate on nausea instead of retarding it.

If all these things fail, and you find you are going to be sick in spite of all precautions your next course is to find a cure. There are two remedies advised by all old sea dogs. are two remedies advised by all old sea dogs. The first is to stay on deck and let the wind blow through you. There is a well-founded ief among those who have tried this that belief among those was invented by somebody the advice was invented by somebody had murder in mind; some enemy of human race. The second remedy, always urged with a good, healthy smile, is to keep on eating, no matter how bad you feel. You might as well try to force a canary to eat a not saying rude things, is invariably playing on the fiddle. He is a famous leg of of mutton at a sitting or a horse te eat tenpenny nails as to get a seasick person to follow this counsel. In fact, the only infallible cure for seasickness is jumping overboard. It has been tried many times and with grati-

Of course you will take three large trunks. If you are a woman be sure to take your ball dress. You are so likely to be asked up to dress. You are so likely to be asked up to Windsor any morning to lunch with the Queen, and you will be so flooded with invitations from the great bourse? tations from the great houses in Mayfair that you will need all the resources of your ward-robe. If you are a man, be sure to add to your outfit a pair of knee breeches, in case you should attend a levee or a state ball. Silk stockings and pumps, too, should not be forgotten. If you are economically inclined, a pair of bicycle "pants" will save you the cost of new unmentionables, and a pair of old tennis shoes carefully daubed with liquid hlacking, and organized the first house of the control of from the great houses in Mayfair that lacking and ornamented with tin foil blacking and ornamented with tin foil buckles will pass you before the Queen, who is growing near sighted of late.

By all means take a steamer chair! While you are writhing in your berth some economical fellow traveller who failed to buy one ical fellow traveller who failed to buy one will be glad to occupy it for you, and he will willingly turn it over to you when at the end of your voyage you emerge from your seclusion so that you may pay storage on it until you take passage back.

Of course you will find English spoken everywhere, especially in the British Islands, on account of the number of Americans who visit them. You may not comprehend the English that is spoken in Paris, but the French are satisfied with it, and you ought to be. It is better, however, to know some Erench before visiting Paris. It is humiliating to see children of three and four years old in the streets of Paris speaking French with fluency while you have to consult a phrase book at every turn.

This talk about the enormous cost of European travel is gammon. If you will go over in the streets of in the trickers were in the streets of in the travel is gammon.

This talk about the enormous cost of European travel is gammon. If you will go over in the steerage, ride in third-class carriages, wear cellulofd linen, purchase sixpenny scats at the theaters, take lodgings in dingy quarfers, patronize the penny barbers, visit museums and galleries on free days, eat meat once a week, and never give a tip, you need not spend a fortune. Of course it costs more to travel than it does to stay at home. There are people who will tell you just the contrary. By all means keep a diary, so that you may edify your friends when you return from abroad. A good guide-book is indispensable to you if you mean to keep a diary. Every evening after you return to your botel relate in detail in your diary what you have seen, carefully copying, for that purpose, the description in your guide-book. It is useless to enter in your diary anything that is not mentioned in the guide-books. Nobody else ever does. If you are harassed with diagonal means the second means and the second means and the second means and the second means and the second means are the second means and the second means and the second means are second.

Nobody else ever does. If you are harassed

Nobody else ever doss. If you are harassed with financial matters, you will do well to put the cost of everything down in your diary. The items will edify your friends when you read them, and recall to you places which you might not otherwise remember. When you land on your return you will of course have contraband goods in your trunk, and you will be questioned about them. Do not try to put the customs officers off the track. Tell them you have a few presents for friends, for inspection. Indeed, you will do well to unstrap one of them (in which you were careful to put nothing dutiable). Your willingness to be examined may deceive the officers into thinking that you have no smuggled goods, and they may let you off without a search.

a search.

If the foregoing advice be faithfully followed, there is no reason why your visit to Europe should not prove in the greatest W. E. K.

AMERICAN GIRLS.

How a Party Succeeded in Shaking Hand

With Bismarck A few weeks ago a company of young ladies from Maine made a vow that they ould not only see Bismarck, but shake hands with him. And they accomplished their yow in the most easy and natural ed their yow in the most easy as a bazaar manner. The occasion was a bazaar given at Bismarck's palace in Berlin for the benefit of the Ten Pfennig Society, the benefit of the poor. The or society for the aid of the poor. The Maine girls repaired to the palace at 1:30 p.m. and found the apartments crowded with people buying goods much as is done in our New England bazaars. Pre-sently the young ladies saw that the sensy the young latties saw that the worshippers of Bismarck began to be aware of his presence, and half a dozen bouquets were placed in his hands.
"What lovely flowers the prince has!"

said one of the girls, in English. Bismarck overheard the remark, and turning to the young lady and shaking her hand, said also in English: "But do you not think there are more stowed on me than I deserve "If I had more I would add them to ur stock," she retorted.

Bismarck laughed and added: "I am very glad to see that you Americans take interest enough in the bazaar to come

The Maine girls again found it conveni ent to speak in somewhat enthusiastic terms in English what they saw and

"What a magnificent man Prince Bismarck is!" remarked one. The prince turned and smiled and ex-tended his hand to each of the Maine girls and said: "And you, too, are Americans. And you think the palace is magnificent, do you? I am glad it pleases you. I am happy to welcome you as Americans."

Princes and Their Names. The name by which the Prince of Wales is known in the royal family is Bertie. That was the pet name (for short) given to him when he was the pride of Albert and Victoria's joint-stock nursery, and it has stuck to him ever since. They say that when the Queen hears the one whom she wishes to be friendly with has become disgruntled she says: "We must send Bertie to set matters aright." The Prince of Wales is a capital peacemaker. He hates a row, and he has a happy faculty of smoothing over difficulties and patching up truces. His younger brother, the Duke of Edinburgh, is not so happily constituted; he is more like his mother, and he seems to take a delight in saying and doing things which are popularly called "unpleasant." He married the only daughter of the Czar, and that spirited woman has cultivated rather than softened the young man's asperity. Her name is Marie, but she is by no means as saintly as her name would suggest. She hates the English, and she is candid enough to declare that she hates to live in England. So, in one way and another, she makes life lively for her young husband, who, when he

A Fasting Man of the Sixteenth Century, Since starving matches are again being tried it may be interesting to give an instance of a Scotchman who endured a trial of this kind about three hundred years ago. In an old document in the British Museum there is an account by one Uianesius Albergatus which he relates to the Papal Nuncio, at the Court of Scotland, about a man who did some wonderful fasting. ing, piaying, cancing, everything. Everywhere it is one continual rush. What is the result?

What is always the result when there is too much steam and the safety valve is tied overwork and overworry so prevalent in Canada and in the United States to-day.

The annual report of the New York Board of Charities shows this in a most alarming and convincing manner, for it makes the statement that "the number of insane persons in the State has increased 62 per cent.

one insane person to every 300 inhabitants."
