

The Scrap Bag

The English people, says an American exchange, will never understand the humorous temper of the American, which makes him ask such questions as that recorded by Mark Twain as having been asked by a friend of his in the British Museum. A guide had exhibited an Egyptian mummy, and discussed long upon the antiquity of it, and the Egyptian process of embalming, and so forth; and at last the American asked: "Is he dead?"

It was only recently, according to a letter in an exchange, that in St. Paul's Cathedral a London guide held forth thus to an American gentleman: "That, sir, is the tomb of the greatest naval hero Europe or the whole world ever knew!"

"Yes?"

"It is, sir, the tomb of Lord Nelson. This marble sarcophagus weighs 42 tons. Inside that is a steel receptacle weighing twelve tons, and inside that is a leaden casket, 'artistically sealed,' weighing two tons. Inside that is a mahogany coffin holding the ashes of the great 'ero."

"Well," said the Yankee, after reflecting a moment, "I guess you've got him. If he ever gets out of that, telegraph me at my expense."

Fussy Old Lady—Now, don't forget, conductor. I want the Bank of England. Conductor—All right, mum. (Aside)—She don't want much, do she, mate?—Punch.

MY SWEETHEART.

Morning.

She is a Quaker—in her quiet gown,
Her words demurely spoken and
eyes cast down;
A busy little housewife, dainty and
complete,
Softly moving round with quiet,
slipped feet.

Afternoon.

She is a lady—carefully dressed,
A charming, thoughtful hostess, self-
composed, possessed, Fascinating, as she pours out five o'clock tea.
And talks of Huxley to young Jones
—or love, perhaps, with me.

Evening.

She is a beauty—in her evening silk,
Eyes shining brightly, shoulders like milk;
Full of dash and banter, capricious as
a queen,
Dancing like a fairy on a moonlit
green.

Night.

She is an angel—in her robes of white
And the stars shine on her through the quiet night,
Guarding her peaceful slumbers—nor disturbing them
With thoughts of one unworthy to kiss her garment's hem.
Polly King, in Vogue.

The Literary Digest tells of a lady visiting Paderewski's villa in Paris recently, who noticed a cherry-stone on the mantelpiece. She took possession of it, and had it set in pearls and diamonds as a relic of the master. A few weeks later Paderewski met this lady, who, in the course of conversation, showed him the cherry-stone with its elegant setting. "But, madam," said Paderewski, stroking his locks, "I never eat cherries. The one you found on the mantelpiece must have been left by my servant."

It is sometimes very painful to do one's duty, but never so painful as not to have done it.

La Rochefoucauld said: "We all have enough strength to bear the misfortunes of others." He should have added: "But always enough to bear their good fortune."

Men are partial where they feel affection and love; partial where they despise and dislike; partial where they stand in awe and reverence; partial where they feel sorrow and compassion; partial where they are arrogant and rude. Thus it is that there are few men in the world who love and at the same time know the bad qualities of the object of their love; or who hate and yet know the excellence of the object of their hatred.—The Great Learning (ch. viii.)

No matter how cheap venison is, it is always deer.

Ferrari, the celebrated composer, relates the following anecdote in his memoirs: "On a cold December night, a man in a little village in the Tyrol opened the window and stood in front of it, with hardly any clothing to his back. 'Peter!' shouted a neighbor, who was passing, 'what are you doing there?' 'I'm catching a cold.' 'What for?' 'So I can sing bass tomorrow at church.'—Household Words.

DAILY HINTS TO HOUSE-KEEPERS.

Hail, all hail, to the new!
The future lies like a world new-born.
All steeped in sunshine and mists
of mirth,
And arched by the cloudless blue.
Hail, all hail, to the new.
—Mary A. Lathbury.

If only we strive to be pure and true,
To each of us all there will come
an hour
When the tree of life shall burst into flower
Or something grander than ever we knew.

This costume has several distinguishing and unique features. First, there is the blouse front in the waist, composed of a triple box-pleat; then the collarette is very unique; the sleeve is the newest thing and is composed of four pieces; then the skirt is also a feature; it contains five gores and a box-pleated back. The sleeves have the seams all outlined in passementerie, cord or braid and the collar is outlined to correspond. The collar may be worn or not, as it is detachable. This costume will develop handsomely in cheviot, twilled goods, home-spun, bouclé, silk, velvet or novelty goods. In case of wool goods the collar should be of velvet, as also the crash belt and bow at the back of the waist. No. 432 Ladies' Basque. Wash with Blouse Front and Fancy Collar requires for medium size 7 1/2 yards.

The Newest Thing in Boas.

The young woman who adopts the latest caprices of fashion not only wears a big broad hat with what looks like brooding fowl for the trimming, but if she insists on having something that is really striking in this bold novelty she will wear what looks like a real life-size Chinese pheasant oodling close under her white chin with its tail feathers drooping almost to her waist.

It is enough to make the eyes of a sportsman open, and if well-trained bird dogs suddenly point before some smart matron or fashionable young woman it is only a just tribute to the gamey looking fowl under her chin.

Under the pointer will not know that the birds are really and truly only burn-yard fowls, and ought to be beneath the attention of well-bred bird dogs. His master will know no better, since the birds are Chinese pheasants.

Women are surfeited with the pelts of animals of every description. The latest this year is the life-size racoon, mink or otter. Some women come very near to wearing a regulation Alaska sable or Behring Sea seal about their necks.

And the one for wings and plumage of every kind for millinery use is responsible for the fashion of this bird boa, which makes the fair wearer resemble a peripatetic aviary, and to a Chinaman would suggest memories of the fowl-yards of his celestial home.

This Chinese pheasant is not a wild fowl, but one which has been domesticated, and is very carefully bred and crossed to secure the exquisite shades and markings of plumage that appear in these boas. Thus worn they are very becoming, even if the effect is startling. Only the breasts and heads and tail feathers are used.

The breasts are arranged on the hat so that they puff out and look as if the entire pheasant was perched on the top of the girl's head. The head of the bird is placed in such a way as to increase this resemblance, and another soft breast under the rolling brim adds to the quaint deception.

The boa to match this is made of five large breasts. The plumage is short and fine and soft, and is like a grass leaf. The more familiar English pheasant is very like the female Chinese pheasant, with its rich, dark, shiny brown-and-white markings. At each end of the band to go around the neck the boas are finished with a lot of tail feathers, and on one end is the head of the bird.

The Chinese pheasant is a peacock among pheasants. It has a tail in which there are two long feathers, sometimes four feet long. There is also a mass of shorter feathers. The male bird is of various shades of peacock-green, gray-green and blue. He takes fine care of his plumage, which accounts for its shimmering and shining. The head, which rests under the chin, as in any boa, is sometimes five inches long with a sharp beak, beautifully marked. When this is crossed and fastened the tail feathers, of which only the shorter ones are used, form a soft shower of long feathers over the front of the wearer's coat. This is an adaptation of a Parisian idea which a Broadway masculine milliner has made, because Americans do not care to go to the limit of eccentricity favored in Paris.

They are specially adapted to the mild days of winter and for travelling in the South. There is a time when South bound travellers find furs a nuisance, but wish something to secure the same effect of richness about the throat or to protect weak throats. These feather collarettes give just that effect.

The society that is trying to suppress the killing of birds to secure their plumage for women's hats needn't lose any sleep over these pheasants, although their heads must be killed to make one set. The Chinese raise these pheasants just as Americans raise ducks in their chicken yards.

The Japanese dress the plumage, and it is as sweet as if perfumed. These sets of hats and collarettes come in greens, gray-greens, blues and browns. When the latter shade is chosen, the bantam roosters and prize fowl at a poultry show might be justified in claiming a speaking acquaintance at least with the arrangement.

Fashionable Stock Collars.

Breiden ribbons are much used and do make very effective stocks, but they should be detachable ones, for they are apt to grow tiresome when worn very often. The industrious woman, that one who has the feminine ability to freshen her belongings and to make her toilette in the house look bright and pretty, will spangle the ribbons for herself, and she can, in many cases, make elaborate designs by following a braiding design with small beads in such a way that a very artistic effect is attained at the cost of little money and some industry.

If?

If you want to preserve apples, don't cause a break in the skin. The germs of decay thrive rapidly there. So the germs of consumption find good soil for work when the lining of the throat and lungs is bruised, made raw, or injured by colds and coughs. Scott's Emulsion, with hypophosphites, will heal inflamed mucus membranes. The time to take it is before serious damage has been done. A 50-cent bottle is enough for an ordinary cold.
