CHAPTER I.

"I think, mother, I will go abroad after

He who said this, suddenly and just a trifle sharply, had been sitting reading at the furthest end of a handsome, not to say gorgeous drawing-room. where a group of four ladies, whose ciothes well matched the apartment, sat conversing. For I have no doubt they would have called it "conversation"—of a highly interesting and improving kind.

The young fellow in the distance, however, did not seem to find it so. He was at that age when men are very critical of women, especially of their mothers and sisters, unless these happen to be sufficiently beautiful ideals to remain such unto son and brother from the cradle to the grave; an exceptionl happiness which befalls few; and it had not befallen Roderick Jardine.

The stout lady who, the instant he spoke, pricked up her ears with a cheerful "Eh, my dear?" was (eccentric nature will sometimes have it so) very unlike this, her youngest child and only son; as unlike as it youngest child and only son; as dhike as it was possible for mother and son to be. Light and dark, fat and lean, large-boned and slender, phelgmatic and nervous—they come of two diametrically opposite types, physically and mentally. Morally—yes, there was similarity there; for Mrs. Jardine was a good woman, and Roderick was, as she ceaselessly declared, being very outspoken as to her feelings, the best of outspoken as to her feelings, the best of sons, though he was a little "peculiar;" like his poor, dear father, of whom he was the

This was true. Her three daughters-now married and settled, except the last, who was just about to be—all took after herself. Not her present self perhaps, but the comely iassie she must have been once—fair-haired, round-cheeked, with a wide mouth and alightly prejecting teath—though possessing slightly projecting teeth—though possessing sufficient good looks to be a belle in Richer den. Roderick alone favored the other side of the house—the tall, dark, rather sad-looking father, who came of old Highland blood, and not being in business like most of the Richerden folk, had led a rather re-tired life, keeping himself very much in the background, even amid his own family. No-body really knew him, or thought much of just before his son went to college. Since then his widow had gradually blossomed out into great splendor; married her two daughters, taken her independant place in him, until he died, whi daughters, taken her independant place in society, Richerden society, as a woman—I beg pardon, a lady—ought to do who has a large fortune, a fine family, and a great capacity for managing both. People had said that she managed her husband; but those who knew Mr. Jardine questioned this. Continues he was he was not exactly this. Gentle as he was, he was not exactly a man to be managed by anybody.
"What were you saying, Rody my

Now, if there was a pet name the young fellow disliked, it was his childish diminutive of 'Rody.' And no man of five-and-twenty is altogether pleased at being called 'a lamb.'

'Can you spare two minutes from that very delightful conversation of yours to listen to me, mother!"

The young man winced a little. "Would not 'yes' do as well as 'ou, ay?" But never mind, it doesn't matter, mother dear," "Ou, ay, my dear." added he, with a sigh, more of weariness than impatience. "Rody, my boy," said she, coming to him half deprecatingly, "were you saying you wished to go abroad? It's late in the year, to be sure, but I'll not hinder you. Only you must promise me not to be climbing up Alps and tumbling into glaciers." Gaziers, she called them; and her voice had the highpitched shrillness which Richerden ladies seldom quite get out of, even when they fancy they have merged their native accent in the purest of English. "Wherever you go, remember you must be back in time for Isabella's marriage."

"Certainly—and mother, don't be afraid of my tumbling into a giacier, or of an avalanche tumbling down upon me. I shall only see the Alps at a distance. At this time of the year one must content one's self

"That's hard, laddie, when you are so fond of the country. But do as you like—do as you like—only don't forget the marriege. You will have to give away the bride, Rody. An! your poor father!"
The widow's eyes filled with tears. If she had not understood her husband, she had loved him certainly, and more parhaps after back at dinner time.' "A little before dinner-time, please, my dear, Remember we have companytwenty at least-a regular dinner party." "Oh, yes, a 'meeting of creditors,' as my father used to call it," said the young man somewhat bitterly. "No fear, mother: I'll be tack in time, and do my duty to all the

"They're not old fogies; there are some as nice girls as you could wish to see, if you'd only look at them, Roderick," said Bella. who, going to be married herself. quite lamented that her only brother seemed determined against matrimony.
"Well, I will, Bell, I promise you, only let me go now." And snatching up his hat

—a Glengarry bonnet which he persisted in wearing, though his sisters told him it made him look like the High and porters at the quay-he fairly ran away. Rapidly the young fellow walked on brough park and square, through street tnd wind, or 'vennel,' as such dreary dens are often called here; shrinking from and a etesting alike the poverty and the riches, the splendor and the rags. It began to rain heavily, but he heeded not. Though brought up in luxury, he was not luxurious by nature, could stand a good deal of hardship, and had a young man's instinctive pride in roughing it. Still, an even down-pour, as his mother would have called it, is not an agreeable thing; and as in reality his only engagement was with himself, whose company he felt free to anion as much as any pany he felt free to enjoy as much as any-body else, he stopped his walk and turned into a railway station, where at least he could sit down quietly and read his letters, which he had snatched up from the hall-

But having no very interesting correspondence—for he had left behind at Cambridge few intimates and no duns, also being, I fear, of a rather dilatory turn of mind, and table on going out. given to the bad system of laissez-aller-Roderick left the letters unopened in his pocket, and sat idly watching the passengers gather for a train which was about to

And when he heard the guard calling out the name of a place where he and his father had spent many a happy day, on a sudden impulse he sprung into the train without a ticket ("just like Rody, silly fellow," they would have said at home), and was borne

As he swept along in the train, and, quitting it, started on an old tamiliar walk along high cliffs which gave him a view of the country—land and sea—for many lovely miles, Roderick's heart was very full. Not only of his father, but of himself and his own future, which lay before him like a map; the map of an untraveled countryuntraveled but yet not undiscovered, for there were in it more certainties than lie there were in it more certainties than lie in the lot of many young men of his age.

Poor fellow? so young, so ignorant of life and its burdens. Yet he thought himself quite wise andold, and felt his burden very heavy indeed, and himself a most unfortunate fellow, on being obliged to go back to that meeting of creditors' which he detected.

"But I'll enjoy myself here to the very last minute," thought he, and sat down on a heather bush—for on that high ground everything looked as if it never had rained and never would rain again, till the next time, which would probably be within twenty-four hours. Wrapping his plaid about him, he felt perfectly happy. That lovely outline of hills, he must just put it down; so, hunting in his pocket for the person of the the Liberals put on 21 new names and took off 102. The Tories removed 51 and put on 9. Hurrah! for the Grits.—[Paris Review. pencil that was always a-missing, he turned out the letters which he had crammed in there, and looked them over.

None attracted him, except a black-edged one: which, when opened, he found was one of the 'intimations' of death, customary in Scotland, acquainting him that there had died "at Blackhall, aged sixty-nine, Miss Silence Jardine.'

Silence Jardine! Surely a relation? Who could she be? For he knew his father and he were the last of their family. However thinking a minute, he remem-bered that in the business arrangements after his fathers death, which, he being under age, had been managed entirely by his mother, she had told him that Brackhall, the ancestral property, "a queer tumble-down place, which nobody would care for," was to be inhabitated, so long as she liked, by Miss Jardine, a second cousin. This must be she who had now

The great lung healer is found in the excellent medicine sold as Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It soothes and diminishes the sensibility of the membrane of the throat and air passages, and is a sovereign remedy for all coughs colds, hoarseness, etc. It has cured many when supposed to be far advanced in consumption.

The ladies of the Guelph City Mission, discovered four little children in a house on Grove street Wednesday, whose mother had deserted them. When found they were in a pitiable state, being utterly without food or fuel, the two youngest crouching around the stove in which there was not a spark of fire. The Humane Society are taking prompt action with a view of having the children taken care of, and punishing the heartiess mother. A Windsor dispatch says: Peter Tetreau attempted a terrible crime Tuesday. His wife and little daughter reside at Sandwich, and when the brutal man gets filled with bad whisky he uses them in an inhuman manner. Tuesday he seized a kettle filled with boiling water and attempted to throw the contents upon them. He partly succeeded, but the mother escaped from the house with the child in her arms. One of the neighbors came to her rescue. After a struggle, in which both were badly scalded, the kettle was taken from the frenzied man. He was arrested and given twenty days in the county jail.

Another of the early settlers of Ekfrid has died, namely Mr. William Eddie. Mr. Eddie was born in Scotland and came to America with his parents when a boy. After living for a time in Lockport, N. Y., where he served three years in the United States cavalry, his people, about the year 1831, settled in the township of Exfrid. His second wife, by whom he has three sons and three daughters living, is a daughter of the late John McKillican, of East Williams. Mr. Eddie has been for many years a member of the Glencoe Presbyterian Church, and was in his 79th year. There was a good turnout of members at the meeting of Court Star of Lobo, A. O. F., held at Lobo village last Friday night, and it was indeed a red letter occasion in the history of the court. Bro. F. Rossiter, D.C.R., Middlesex district, paid them an official visit, and during the evening initiated eight members. Eight more were proposed for the next meeting—pretty good indeed for a court in the country. Afterwards the D. C. R., who was assisted by A. Graham as H. C. woodward, installed the officers for the ensuing term, concluding with an address to the members upon the progress and welfare of the order, which was listened to with great attention. brought the court to a close. A most interesting and enjoyable event took place on Wednesday, at the residence of Mrs. Husser, London, township, it being the marriage of her daughter, to Mr. Jas, N. Barter. The groom was ably supported by his brother Joseph, and Wm. Husser, brother of the bride, while Miss Bessie Barter, sister of the groom, and Miss Fannie Fleming, of London, acted as bridesmaids. The bride looked charming in her beautiful white cashmere, with bouquet of flowers, and the bridesmaids were prettily gowned in pald-blue and white respectively. The bride was given away by her eldest brother, Mr. Thos. Husser.
