"Because, said Gladys, coloring, "Dr. Forbes says—and I see for myself, too—that you are doing yourself harm. But it will be different in the future," pleadingly, "for you have promised to amuse me. As for this book,"—she bent forward to take it from the grass where it lay,—"Italian—do you care so much to read that?"
"I must: that's all."

"I must; that's all."
"Must?" cried Gladys, with pretty disdain. "Ought, perhaps, and so ought I to be reading it, I suppose, for I seldom do, and I do not read well, though I can "Can you?" asked the young man with-interest; "I wish you would sometimes talk with me."

"But I will," said Gladys, her eyes lighting up with sudden pleasure, "if only you will go about with us that we may have things to talk about. Promise, Mr. Lindesay—it is a duty!"

"No duty,"returned the young man, but a pleasure to please you, so I promise, and will begin with the 'hop' tonight. Now, Miss Lyman, define your use of the word duty."

"It is a duty," said Gladys gravely, "to use all the talents one has and not to warp any up ni a napkin. If we have powers of entertaining, we are bound to use them."

"I defy you to tell me why."

"Wait until I try," said the girl smiling, and coloring again, but with a pretty look of child-like earnestness in her face, as if she had been asked a hard question at school and were anxious not to fail. "It is a duty to others, of course heaves it helm to make life of course, because it helps to make life happier and brighter; and to ourselves, I think, because—"

"Because from a point of worldly wishers it makes it easier for us to get

"Because from a point of worldly wisdom, it makes it easier for us to get on in the world. Oh! if you fall back on policy, Miss Lyman, I may perhaps agree with you."

"I had no such thought in my mind at all," she answered eagerly. "I was going to say that for ourselves it is best tecause it helps to make us loved. Now that I have said it, it sounds like some 'goody' saying in a book," reddening with vexation, "and not at all as I mean it, but at least you do not think it bad or politic motive?"

"What, the wish to be loved? No, you sweet child!" said Lindesay impulsively, flushing a little the next moment at his own words; but Gladys' face had been irresistible. "I beg your pardon for my impertinence," he added.
Gladys, too, had colored, but not with vexation.

"I am not at all angry," she said simply. "I have no doubt I do seem a very silly child, especially when I try to lecture other people about life of which I know so little myself. Only I am clear in this one thing, Mr. Lindesay, that your way isn't the right one, and I am so glad you are willing to try mine. You promised to begin tonight, remember." ber."
"It is a compact."

"It is a compact."

The Italian book was not resumed, though the sketch was, and, when the walking party returned, and Lindesay as well as Gladys joined it, it was in such a different mood than usual—a mood so overflowing with fun, and what Madge was pleased to call "nonsense talk," that she opened wide eyes of amezement, wondering, mentally, what "Gladys had done to help Mr. Lindesay off his stilts." Young Clifford, too, disposed, at first, to resent the usurpation of the post to which he had aspired, quickly mollified under the influence of Raymond's unwontedly affable mood, and showed himself the amiable, if not brilliant, youth he was. Nor was and showed himself the amiable, if not brilliant, youth he was. Nor was Madge's astonishment diminished by the experiences of the "hop" that evening. "Really." she remarked to Edith, as she prepared for bed, shaking each article vigorously as she took it off, and walking round and round the rather circumscribed space. "I begin now to understand the meaning of the word 're-

"What are you talking of, Madse?"
"Of Gladys' mysterious influence; but scarcely expected you to get hold of the clew!"
"Are you sure you have it yourself?"
"I'm groping for it," returned Madge from the depths of her bureau drawer.

CHAPTER VI.

"And Gladys will make the sixth—you will go, of course?"
Madge turned to her cousin as she came out on the hotel piazza to join the gay after-breakfast group of zirls.
"Perhaps so, when I know where."
"Oh! in a sail-boat to Sullivan, this afternoon—it's the proper thing to go over to the silver mines, you know," replied Madge, always too much in a hurry to be very lucid in her explanations. "It is Anna's party. She and Mr. Clifford, Mr. Follen and Mr. Boylston, who is quite at home on the water, are going, so you Follen and Mr. Boylston, who is quite at home on the water, are going, so you need not be afraid. You will go?"

"No, I think not," said Gladys, hesitating, and glancing at her elder cousin, who sat by with her embroidery. "Oh, r.o! I can't," with an air of relief; "it is my Italian afternoon."
"Italian afternoon!" said Anna curlously, "why, who gives lessons here?" and Edith looked up quickly from her work.
"Not lessons, exactly," said Gladys, coloring a little under the publicity of the examination. "Mr. Lindesay and I read and talk Italian together on Tuesday afternoons, and I would rather not go, thank you."

the examination. "Mr. Lindesay and I read and talk Italian together on Tuesday afternoons, and I would rather not go, thank you."

"I scarcely think you need mind that, my dear," said Edith, in the quiet, incisive tone Gladys had learned to interpret as conveying a hint of indecorum to Madge, "if that is all. It can scarcely be a regular engagement, as we have not heard of it before, and it would be very easy to explain to Mr. Lindesay, if explanation should be necessary."

"And you needn't be afraid of mamma's objecting," said outspoken Madge, "though we must start before she gets back from her excursion. As Anna is sister to one of the young men, it makes her a sort of chaperon, don't you see?"

"And there is always safety in numbers," said Anna, with the slight sneer Gladys disliked so much. "You will be much safer with us, I assure you, than if you kept your land engagement. Will is depending on your joining the party. You will say yes?"

"Since it seems to be already arranged," said Gladys, turning away with a shade of vexation on her fair face.

"And I will make your excuses to Mr. Lindesay if I meet him on my way back," said Anna. "Come, Madge."

'The gay chatting group sauntered off along the shore, the light dresses and bright parasols glinting in and out among the trees, but Gladys still lingered beside Edith. She was not apt to be so easily persuaded against her will, but something in her cousin's glance had seemed to convey a reproof, and Gladys, though all unconscious of wrong-doing, had been too proud to persist in her purpose. Edith waited until the party were from all possible eavesdroppers.

"Were you really afraid that mamma might not think it just the thing to go, Gladys?"

"It thought of it—but girls do so many things here that seem to me a little strange."

"But, my dear," said Edith, with a superior smile, "that is just the reason things here that seem to me strange."

"But, my dear," said Edith, with a superior smile, "that is just the reason why you may do them! Of course, one always does at Rome somewhat as the Romans do, and water parties among the girls and young men are every-day affairs at Bar Harbor, while no one reads Italian with Mr. Lindesay, Gladys."

"There is surely nothing improper in that," said Gladys, flushing hotly. "It came about very naturally, Edith, and that," said Gladys, flushing hotly. "It came about very naturally, Edith, and I never thought to speak of it. I seem like a schoolgirl to Mr. Lindesay, I suppose, and, as I speak Italian, and he wished to learn to talk—but I am sorry I mentioned it."

"I am sure mamma will be very glad," replied Edith, sententiously. "Of course, you did not think of it, my dear, but, in a place like this, one can't be too careful about exciting gossip."

"I trust I never may, indeed!" rejoined Gladys, turning into the house with a

Gladys, turning into the house with a choking sensation in her throat. She took a book and strolled down on the bank within sight of the house, for she felt too indignant, just then, to remain placidly seated beside her cousin. It was not entirely for the disappointment about the reading on no! though Tueswas not entirely for the disappointment about the reading, oh, no! though Tuesday afternoons had been very pleasant for the last six weeks. It was because Edith, with her elder-sister air of propriety, and Anna, with her stare and laugh, had conspired to carry to Gladys' mind a thought which had never before been there. To her Mr. Lindesay was, indeed, different from the other young men—different in being older, more intellectual, superior in every way—different, too, in being unhappy. Had not Dr. Forbes himself told her she must try to win him from that morbid shrinking into himself, and had she not been filled with happy pride that she had so far succeeded? And now was all to be spoiled by ed? And now was all to be spoiled by foolish thoughts of self?

The Italian reading had not formed the The Italian reading had not formed the only subject of conversation, though it had been too great a pleasure to Lindessay to hear Gladys' pure, musical tones for that to be thrown aside. Some pages of the "Inferno" always began the interview; then talk naturally followed. Discussion of the great Florentine paved the way for other authors; from individual preferences in reading to other personal peculiarities was a short and easy transition. Gladys had been at first surprised to find how good a linguist Raymond was, then delighted to see how easily he caught the liquid accents from her lips, and how soon it seemed to be as natural to him as it was to herself to be talking Italian. Occasionally too, after reading to her some passage from an English author, he would unconconsciously fall back into the same language, and she would scarcely notice it.

SCIENTIFIC BEGGING

Arrest of a Man in New York Who Taught Boys the Art of Begging,

New York, Feb. 19.—According to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Wells Marshall, who was held for trial in the Center street court on a charge of cruelty to children, has been running a school at 13 Oliver street, where, during the last month, boys have been scientifically taught the art of begging.

Theodore Nalence, a 13-year-old boy, of Brooklyn, after receiving regular instructions, as well as a complete outfit of clothes from Marshall, went home without returning to him the money he had succeeded in collecting from a number of charitably disposed people. On Saturday he walked into his house in Brooklyn so well dressed and apparently prosperous that his father failed to recognize him.

"I ken get clothes or money or anything like that," he said, pulling a handful of small change out of his pocket. "I don't have to do what you self now. It's none of your business how I gets the money. I just called in to see how you and the family was."

After Mr. Nalence, with the aid of the switch, had convinced his son he was not entirely his own master, The-odore tearfully told the story of his wanderings. He had met Marshall, who fitted him out in a new attire and then gave him a letter written on the stationery of the industrial de-partment of the Waifs' and Newsboys' Home of Philadelphia. It asked the charity of the public for the lad, who was en route to Boston after losing his mother by death. Theodore collected $5 in one day. He had to give it all up to Marshall. Then he decided to pocket his future receipts and call on the folks at home.

This led to the undoing.

The Carling Cup Remains in London.

Aberdeens Defeated—London | Team Wins at Watford—Boxing Show at Toronto.

HOCKEY.

CUP REMAINS IN LONDON. The second and deciding game of the Carling cup series was played at the Jubilee rink last night, and the result was that the trophy remains in London for another year, while the Aberdeens take back with them the sorrowful tale of how it happened, and several badly disfigured players. It was seven to three -and the local bunch had the larger end. The game was an ideal one from a spectator's point of view, being one of the hardest fought ever witnessed on local ice. Several lively mix-ups oc-curred in the first five minutes' play, which amply showed that both teams were out to win. The combination work of the easterners was superior to the seven representing London, but their individual play was hardly as strong. London's defense—Bishop, Charlton and Forrester — put up a stone-wall defense, and broke the combination of the visitors with apparent ease. Forrester worked in a number of his lightning-like shots, and scored twice. His work at cover delighted local enthusiasts. Morrison also did some pretty work, and was easily the prettiest stick-handlers on the ice. Bishop, in goal, played a strong game, and won frequent applause, as did Cope, Ottawa's fast little goalkeeper. G. N. Gauthier, of Windsor, refereed, and gave entire satisfaction. The lineup was as follows.

London—Goal, Bishop; point, Charlton; cover, Forrester; forwards, Westcott (captain), Siebert, Morrison and

The score at half-time was 5 to 2, and when the gong sounded, 7 to 3. MONTREAL WON.

Montreal, Feb. 18.—The Montreal hockey team whitewashed Quebec in the sche-duled match in the senior championship series, which was played on the Arena ice on Saturday evening. Score, 4 to 0. AN INVESTIGATION.

AN INVESTIGATION.

Toronto, Feb. 18.—There is every chance of the C. A. A. U. investigating the match played Saturday at London between the Aberdeens, of Ottawa, and a London team. None of the players expelled and professionalized by the O. H. A. figured on the team, but then, it is claimed, the gentleman who managed the game was under the ban. The team which represented London was unique, in that the players hailed from as many towns as there were members on the team.

GUELPH CITY CHAMPIONSHIP.

GUELPH CITY CHAMPIONSHIP. Guelph, Ont., Feb. 18.—The Intermediate O. A. C. team and the junior Wellingtons met to play for the championship of the city this evening. At half time the score stood 1 to 0 in favor of the Wellingtons, and at the close 9 to 0.

STRATFORD DEFEATS PARIS. Stratford, Ont., Feb. 18.—The Stratford intermediates beat Paris tonight in the second semi-final game in the O. H. A. series by 3 goals to 1. In the first half Paris made the only goal, and it was not until within two minutes of the close of the second half that Stratford was able to score, and when time was up the result was a tie—1 to 1. Five minutes each way was then played, and Stratford made one goal in each, thus winning the round by one goal.

THE SENIORS. Toronto, Feb. 18.—The Wellingtons defeated 'Varsity in the senior hockey series by 6 to 2 tonight, and will meet Queen's here next Friday in the struggle for the LONDONERS DEFEAT WATFORD. Watford, Ont., Feb. 18.—A friendly game of hockey was played here tonight between the Forest City Business College team, of London, and the locals. The game was the fastest played here this season, and resulted in favor of the visitors, the score standing 4 to 3. PUCKERINGS.

PUCKERINGS.

The Toronto Mail, alluding to the Aberdeen-London game here Saturday night, says: In regard to the above game, Francis A. Nelson, of the O. H. A. executive, said that if any of the professionalized London players or officers of that club had anything to do with the game, the Aberdeens and the players from Berlin and other places will all be professionalized. Mr. Nelson said that the O. H. A. executive would inquire into the matter and find out if the old London club was in any way connected with the game.

FISTIC. BOXING SHOW AT TORONTO.

BOXING SHOW AT TORONTO.

Toronto, Feb. 18.—The Toronto A. C.'s boxing show on Saturday night at the Royal Theater brought out a large crowd. In the main bout, a 20-round affair, Bobby Thompson, of Toronto, and Dan McConnell, of Philadelphia, clashed at 138 pounds. The latter had a decided pull in the weights, but he was lucky to secure a draw, which was the decision given by the referee. McConnell showed great aggressiveness, but Thompson held him even at all points. In the last few rounds the Torontonian had the better of the argument. Johnny O'Donnell, of Buffalo, a clever, hard-hitting 110-pounder, defeated Willie Popp, of Toronto, in a 10-round preliminary. In the first round Popp secured two clean knock-downs, but after that he could not land effectively on his shifty opponent. O'Donnell had Popp groggy in the final round, and the referee stopped the contest, giving the former the decision. Archie Woods and Young Petie boxed four rounds to a draw in the curtain-raiser. Harley Davidson was to have figured in the initial bout, but could Glasgow, Feb. 18.—The protest of Mr. George L. Watson against the slow progress of the work on Shamrock II. has had good effect; and during the past week the yacht has grown at a remarkable rate. Quite two-thirds of her outer plating is now in place, riveted up and smoothed off. The plates are of manganese bronze, three-eighths of an inch in thickness, and varying from two feet to three and, a half in width. In the top sides and over-hangs the plates are overlapped and riveted by a double row of rivets to give extra strength to the scams. Below the waterline, however, the butts of the plates are brought edge to edge, and are fitted with such accuracy that the join is scarcely discernible. The rivets are specially made of yellow gun metal. They are counter-sunk into the plates, and are dressed with great accuracy, a burnishing machine being used to make the joins smooth, and giving the burnished sides of the yacht a striking appearance.
