The auditory was full, and the play, thanks to the admirable conception of characters, and the spirited way in which they were carried out, had kept the room in a roar; then, when the curtain drew up on the third scene, a murmur of applause greeted the clever arrangement; the moon shone clear and bright, and Bethel, in the coquettish dress, which so enhanced her beauty, by showing her shapely ankles, snowy bosom and pretty rounded arms, her grace, as she called Marlow's attention, was superb; and Brinley, as Marlow, acted well, for he felt the fire he seemed to assume when he tells her if she "wants a judge of her work she is to apply to him"; and when he tried to embrace her, Bethel, the accomplished actress, the London star, lost her cue word; instead of struggling to herself with saucy assurance, leaned herself against his bosom, gasping

"Good heavens, Brinley, look behind at those awful eyes!" He, clasping her to his heart, as she, trembling like an aspen, leaned against him, saw pressed against the windowpane, clear and bright by the moon, the ragged, gaunt, haggard, figure of a man, with awful white face, which had a look of famine and fear; its staring eyes held a deadly menace. In a moment it had vanished, fell out of the thin blue air like the mere cobweb shadows of the soft, weird clouds which lay a moment upon the brightness of

Then, with renewed vigor, but with a fearful look of dread in her dark eyes, the trained actress took up her and carried her part in triumph to the close, and those who saw the frightened, ashy face and terror-swayed form, thought that a momentary feeling of illness had come over their queenly hostess, and they admired the courage and address which had cast it off as a feather weight, and had brought such brave composure to command its ab-

At the close of the scene, Brinley, who had been startled by the face at the window, gave orders to the men to search the grounds to see if any tramp or poacher was lurking about, and Bethel seemed to have quite forgotten her fright, and led her guests to every height of enjoyment and merry excite-There was an impromptu dance started, and those who had taken part in the play kept on their fancy costumes and seemed to draw all the life and revelry about them. Brinley's heart beat high in contemplation of her beauty, which looked so refined in the soft light and in so quaint a garb, and he felt it was the very witching hour to put his fortune to the test; so drawing her away from the guests, he led her into the rose-garden, a little patch of fairyland full of sweet sights and scents; lovely roses, heavy with perfume, hung their heads as if abashed by the admiration of the moon; there lay on each scented heart a subdued look like a harem when the master's eye plays upon each beauty who, before the full masterful gaze, droop their comely cheeks.

Bethel laughed at the compliment, and, happy by reason of an unsubstantial sense of freedom, sat down at his tial sense of freedom, sat down at his bidding, lifting up her unfathomable orbs to his as he stood above her, leaning over her with unimpassioned looks, The play they had selected was "She and trying to quote lightly a line to were riveted on the flowers as though they fascinated her. He continued, touching the flowers lightly with his hand: 'Why, my queen, you look as though this innocent wreath of roses was a serpent coil. Who denies me now?"

He drew her to him, saying: "Strange that these pure white blossoms should emblem a great sin! Strange that a ring of flowers portrays a circle of power which engirts you even as these arms. He caught the subdued woman to his side; owerpowered by his passion, she was mute, when, with the infuriated howl of a wounded lion, a ragged figure sprung out of the shadow and grappled with him, tore her with maniac strength out of Brinley's embrace. AT GRAVESEND. New York, June 4. — Heno, running in the colors of W. S. Fanshawe, galloped home an easy winner in the standard stakes at Gravesend today. He was held second choice in the betting, and his rider rode an exceptionally good race. The son of Falsetta, or Henry Young Quiver, also smashed the record for the race, and equaled the track record by running the one and memory of the guests for a long while and in Bethel's forever.

Just before supper many of the dancers, well protected from the night air, walked out in the grounds, to catch a breath of fresh air, and to look upon the moonlit landscape. ## In the Home of the Artisan Malta-Vita makes the Early Breakfast the best meal of the day.

Canada's prosperity is due largely to two classes of her people—her mechanics and her farmers, and there is nothing too good in the way of food for either of them.

The old-fashioned idea that the skilled mechanic, because he labors with his muscles as well as his brain, requires a heavy food has been pretty well exploded. The mechanic, himself, has found out that Malta-Vita, the perfect food, is far more nutritious and digestible than meat, potatoes or baker's bread. It is made from the whole wheat and possesses all its nutritive qualities in the most digestible form. Malta-Vita is the ideal food for a hastily prepared meal for it is cooked ready for immediate use. Served, hot or cold, with cream, milk or fruit it is simply delicious.
