KAISER SENDS FLEET TO ENGLAND

London Press is Wondering as to the Object of Visit at This Time.

Plymouth, Eng., July 11.—Thousands of persons witnessed the arrival of the German fleet yesterday at Plymouth. Eight battleships and seven cruisers steamed into the naval base on a visit of courtesy amidst deafening salutes and the British and German admirals exchanged visits. The courtesies will be kept up until July 13, when the Germans will depart. Owing to a wish expressed to King Edward, the Germans will receive no formal public welcome and the ceremonies will be confined to naval honors and to an informal luncheon by the mayor of Plymouth. 52c

London, July 11.—The arrival of the German squadron at Plymouth has created an excellent impression here. The Daily Mail's naval expert, who is one of the best specialists in his line in England, says the squadron is "incontestably the superior in fighting qualities to the British home or channel fleets as now constructed." The visit creates no little adverse editorial comment, its object being held to be a mystery which, the Daily Mail declares, is only explained by the anxiety of the Kaiser to see the mobilization of the British fleet which is now preparing for the maneuvers. 52c
