Military Demand For Aides Coming to an End As War Victims Are Recovering.

New methods of restoring the sick in hospitals of Canada, by means of occupational therapy, were demonstrated at a public meeting, staged by the London branch of the Ontario Society of Occupational Therapy i the auditorium of the Western University Medical School Monday night. Samples of weaving, basketrugs, made by invalid soldiers in military hospitals of the district, were on display at the meeting, howing the art cultivated by these men, which at the same time imroved their general condition.

"The aides work in Canada is gradually coming to an end, and they are going to the United States to take up positions offered them. We are going to be where we were before the war—without any aides. America is taking the lead because they have not the girls who know the work over there, and are taking those whom we trained."

salaries of aides could not be met by any surplus.

"The salaries must come from somewhere," asserted Dr. Howland, "but where is the money to come from? It must be from some central source, with branches in all places of Canada. It is a great and splendid object. The Red Cross is doing it in the United States. The question is will the Red Cross do it here?
