FLOCK TO COLORS

By HIRAM K. MODERWELL. Special Cable to The Advertiser and the Chicago Daily News. Copyright. Tirana, Dec. 22.—In every city in Albania last week was seen the picturesque sight of peasants, born under feudalism, gathering to march away in defence of democracy. They represent five classes of the reserve army, but this young republic reserve army, but this young republic is as yet unable to provide them with uniforms. Hence, they go in their farm clothes or in their Sunday-best embroidered vests, or in whatever they were wearing when they left the fields. Nearly all of them wear homemade black sheepskin capes and black and white fezzes, but the remainder of their costume is composed of what the farmhouse provides: Shirts of cheap cotton homes an, trousers that are remnants of French, Austrian or Italian uniforms, shees that vary from fine riding boots shees that vary from fine riding boots to homemade leather, pointed slippers or felt burlap socks. These men, having heard that the republic is in perfit, are continually trudging into Tirana. They are small, spare and alert figures, generally unshaven, but with their keen eyes betraying the intelligence of their race. They show no emotion, but stroll toward the recruiting headquarters, present themselves, receive their rifles and wait near the local mosque, their bronzed faces ese men, having heard that the

their race. They show no emotion, but stroil toward the recruiting headquarters, present themselves, receive their rifles and wait near the local mosque, their bronzed faces, never changing in expression until the summons comes to march, During the long hours while they are awaiting the order to march, the reserves execute native folk dances, 50 in a circle, holding hands and all executing the solemn cross-steps while they chant a dirge-like refrain.

Despite this medieval accompaniment, mobilization is proceeding efficiently. These men, who for centuries have recognized no authority by the complete the size of the florid property of the summons of a central government.
