THE DUKE OF KENT.

His Stay in Boston.

(From the Boston Watchman.)
Prince Edward, afterwards Duke of Kent and the father of (ueen Victoria, passed through Burlington, Vt., in February, He came from Quebec, where he ad had command of a regiment. His trip through the country was accomplished in carryalls and sleighs; a courier had been sent on to Burlington to prepare for his passing the by-law recognizing certain exlation. There were then only seven framed houses in the whole village, and but one, that of Phineas Loomis, large enough to receive so numerous party. The prince arrived in the after-

oon with thirteen carryalls and sleighs, and left the third day before noon. He had with him two aids and two bodyguards, a lady and a cook. The lady was to go to New York, and the prince provided the sleigh which was to convey her with abundance of fur robes, and placed a large dog at her feet. A little incident occurred on the passing of the prince and the lady from the house to the sleigh which illustrates somewhat the character and illustrates somewhat the character and personnel of the prince. An awkward personnel of the prince. An awkward but stout young man was standing in the path, not making room readily for the party in advance. Prince Edward advanced and taking him up bodily set him on one side in the snow. At this place, Burlington, he dismissed the teamsters who had brought him from Canada and engaged five farmers to take him on to Boston. It was said by these men that he was a jolly companion, enjoying the pork

Some time after this rebuff two or three Some time after this rebuff two or three British officers came to Colonel Keyes' hotef. They had with them several dogs. It was an humble home, but its best and largest north room, kept in the nicest order, with its cloau sanded floor, was not an uninviting place for British officers to dine in, and particularly with such a dinner as the colonel never failed to set before gentlemen. The officers and their dogs fore gentlemen. The officers and their dogs fore gentlemen. The officers and their dogs went in to dinner, and the latter soon be gan to feed on the floor. The colonel looked on this as an indignity, and bringing in a pair of pistols laid them formally on the table, denouncing the conduct of the officers, and declaring he would protect the respectability of his house. The effect was what he desired.

A Turkish Tradition.

Great consternation has been caused in Constantinople by a report that the Mosque of St. Sophia is in danger of collapsing; for there is a tradition among the Turks that the fall of this basilica will herald the dismemberment of the empire. The mosque was restored at great expense by the Sultan Abdul Medjid in 1849; under the superintendence of the Italian architect, Fossati. But the work does not appear to have been very well does not appear to have been very well executed, for the grand dome, which is 120 feet in diameter and 250 feet high, is so insecure that, according to the report of the architect who has been called in by the minister of public works, it may fall in at any moment. In other respects the interior of the mosque is in a fairly good state of preservation. Among the many relics preserved in the Mosque of St. Sophia is the carpet upon which Mohammed was wont to pray, and close to the place where wont to pray, and close to the place where this carpet is suspended stands the pulpit from which the Khatib reads the Koran every Friday, holding in his hand a drawn sword as symbolic of St. Sophia having been conquered from the infidel. Another of the relies preserved in St. Sophia is the cradle of our Savior, which, according to tradition, was brought from Bethlehem, together with a sort of basin in which His gether with a sort of basin in which His mother washed Him. The walls of the mosque are covered with green slabs, on which verses from the Koran are engraved

ANCIENT JOURNALISM.

From the Roman Daily Squint-Eye-Then and Now in Rome.

(From The Daily Harvard Herald.) The Herald, always on the alert to furnish its readers the latest news, is pleased to announce the discovery by a reporter of copy of the Roman Daily Squint-Eye. We should like to speak of the Squint-Eye as an esteemed contemporary, but with due respect to the editors, must decline to do so, for the paper was printed about A. D. 125. We present below some extracts;

A large and brilliant audience assembled esterday at the Coliseum to witness some ladiatorial contests that were given by our popular friend, Quintius Publius, recently lected to attend to the removal of ash parrels from the sidewalks, and the arresting of students, who, to use the splendid words of the orator, must be destroyed. The receipts of the box office show that there were nearly 30,000 persons present, and an equal number of slaves and women. Chief interest centered upon the young gladiator, Magnus Pugnus, whom the management have been so judiciously advertising. After killing three lions, an elephant, six leopards, crushing the skull of an ox, kicking down a frame house and eating ten or twelve slaves, he was pitted against one of the slaves, he was pitted against one of the stock company of gladiators, Tetus Idem.
We cannot speak too highly of the ease and We cannot speak too highly of the ease and grace of Pugnus. After some amusing byplay, such as gouging out each other's eyes, tearing ears, etc., the combatants went at it in earnest. It was a royal fight, and the emperor showed his appreciation by now and then throwing a virgin into the bear nits.

An elegant reception began last evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Junius Antoninus. Dancing will be kept up until next week. The banquet is being furnished been for some time paying attention to Julia, the daughter of Flavius. The latter has agreed to give the girl to the young man, Jentulus, but in the meantime another lover offers several million more sesterces for the girl, and Flavius, of course, agreed he should have that Elavius now agreed he should have her. Flavius now sues Lentulus for the cost of oil burned during his calls, some of which, says the prosecutor, lasted three weeks. Lentulus puts in a rejoinder, and says that on three several occasions he kissed the girl, who is homely enough to quiet the Delphic oracle, and that in consideration of this he ought to be let off

We ought to acknowledge the receipt f we ought to acknowledge the receipt from the emperor of an order not to publish the names of his guests at dinner who happen to die rather suddenly. We would like the emperor to understand that we run the paper, and don't care a nighting-gale's eye-lash what he says. Our funeral will take place day after-to-morrow, and all those who have paid up their subscription to date are invited. We are at present receiving bids from the widow.

Mr. Bradlaugh's Expulsion.

Mr. Bradlaugh's Expulsion.

The Pall Mall Gazette observes that there is one feature in the expulsion of Mr. Bradlaugh from the house of commons which distinguishes it at once from all the historical precedents which have been quoted. In all other cases the person expelled was expelled for doing something which, if not legally punishable as a crime, was, at all events, morally criminal. Wither was ostersibly expell d for publishing works condemned by the courts as scandulous and seditious libels. Cochrane was alleged to have committed frauds upon the stock exchange. Walpole was found guilty of having taken a bribe. So was Sir John Trevor, who, when speaker, received £1000 from the corporation of the city for promoting a private bill on their behalf, and put the question to the house whether he was or was not guilty, and had to declare that the yeas had it. But this is the first time a member has been expelled for a mere breach of good manners, or, as Lord Randolph Churchill phrased it, "reiterated insults" to the house, or, in the language of Sir Stafford Northcote, "contempt and contumacy."
