

judgments which he pronounced. His eminence as a master of exquisite English will long be remembered, not only here but wherever that language is spoken.

"Sir John Boyd added a simplicity of character and kindness of disposition to an almost passionate love of law. His rare conception of what was equitable, and therefore equity, and his unequalled training in that branch of legal science, enabled him to give force and direction to the actual union of law and equity which, but for his influence, might have longer remained a union but in name.

"The presence of Sir John Boyd upon the Bench has for so long been a link with the great Judges of the past that his passing away will mark the closing of one period of our legal history. Toronto has a peculiar interest in his memory. He was born here, he was educated and practised here, and here he gathered his judicial laurels. He has during his long life identified himself with what was sound and wholesome in our national life and he leaves with us the remembrance of a great Canadian."

Sir Glenholme Falconbridge who now, by the decease of the late Chancellor Boyd, becomes President of the High Court Division, thus referred to the death of his life long friend and predecessor: "I cannot add anything to the beautiful eulogium pronounced by my learned brother Hodgins, and had I been in his place I think my emotion would have been too great if I had attempted to say anything in public. The relations between Sir John Boyd and myself were particularly intimate and affectionate, dating from the days of his early career at the Bar and my own studentship. The passing of the last of the Chancellors is an irreparable public calamity as well as a cruel personal loss."
