Famous Physician Declares Death Hides in Dust

Startling statistics about the presence of dangerous bacteria in the dust-laden air of London's most-frequented public buildings are agitating the reading public of the world's capital nowadays. One of the most eminent British bacteriologists has just completed an examination of specimens of dust held in the air during the busy hours in the great General Postoffice in Cheapside, and in the main corridors of the Custom House In one cubic fact of the atmospheric factors. Postoffice in Cheapside, and in the main corridors of the Custom In one cubic foot of the atmosphere of the latter building the eminent physician who made these microscopic tests estimates that there were about 12.000,000 vigorous phthisis germs. He sounds a note of warning against the prevolent carelessness of the public in breathing dust-laden of many malignant diseases, and especially of the germs which cause and aggravate affections of the throat and lungs. People with slight colds—if any cold can be rightly termed "slight"—need to be particularly careful. The air of any house or building is laden with dust; and if that dust is thick with the germs of disease, as it usually is, the danger can hardly be overstated. Lodging in the breathing passages, the deadly germs of consumption find a harborage among the inflamed tissues of the throat and nose, and unless prompt remedial measures are taken, what was a "slight" cold speedily becomes a chronic malady, with a possibly fatal crisis near.

The simple precaution of keeping moist the air of living rooms—bedrooms, especially—will greatly help in the battle against dust; and an easily-available remedial treatment will ordinarily overcome the ills that arise from breathing the dust-laden air of the streets, cars and public buildings. At the first sign of a cough or cold, a mild laxative to keep the bowels active, in conjunction with the timely use of Shiloh's Cure, will allay the inflammation of the lungs and throat tissues, and restore the bodily eystem to its healthy state.

If the cold has a firm grip, however, or the cough through neglect has become deep-seated, the treatment must needs be rather more vigorous.
