Post all correspondence as early as practicable, especially when sent in large quantities, the latter tie up in bundles, with the addresses all in one direction.

Address all correspondence in a legible and complete manner.

Every letter should contain within the full name and address of the writer in order to insure its return, if for any cause it should be sent to the Dead Letter Office.

Do up all classes of mailable matter in strong covers, discarding the use of flimsy, brittle paper for such purposes.

Letter boxes attached to the doors of offices and private residences will facilitate delivery by Letter Carriers.

If a registered letter should not reach its destination as quickly as an ordinary letter, no uneasiness should be felt. In some cases a slight delay is experienced owing to the precautionary system of registration now in operation, but in no case should the delay exceed 24 hours.

Complaints of incivility on the part of Postal Officials, or any postal irregularity, should at once be made to the Postmaster, or in his absence to the Assistant Postmaster.

Carefully preserve the covers of correspondence, the contents of which are not correct.

In some cases the dials and time indicators attached to the street letter boxes have been maliciously broken and mutilated. The Postmaster will suitably reward any person furnishing such information as will lead to the conviction of the offender.
