GREAT FAITH IN STABILITY OF CANADIAN INVESTMENTS

Toronto Business Man Brings Home Cheery Report From England—Believes Canada Should Not Press For Preference; Let Britain Offer It

Frederick B. Robins, president of Robins, Limited has just returned to Toronto after his annual visit to Europe, accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Marguerite Robins. This year he has made a longer stay on the other side of the Atlantic than usual and his extensive journey has included a tour through France, Germany, Switzerland and Great Britain.

Mr. Robins certainly appeared to have derived beneficial effects from his long trip.

"It has been an occasion," he remarked, "during which business has been combined with pleasure, and from both points of view, it has been eminently successful. I made quite a long stay in England, where our firm has now a large connection, which will shortly be further developed. Trade in the old country shows an improvement and there does not appear to me to be any lack of capital. I observed an increasing tendency to invest in propositions outside of the United Kingdom, and my experience was that sound undertaking is in Canada were receiving greater attention than ever and for such there was no difficulty in securing capital. Nothing pleased me more than to see the faith in the stability of Canadian investments. I am certain that we have only to put forward sound financial enterprises and capital will flow from the old country in this direction."

Knotty Tariff Problem

In reply to a question on the subject of preference Mr. Robins remarked: "That is far too complex a matter to discuss now. My view is that we should not press any demand for preferential treatment in Great Britain, if it is not offered to us. The tariff is a difficult one in the old country, and the attitude adopted of allowing Great Britain to work out her own salvation without pressure from us is, I think, the correct one. I can see a form of protection in the old country which might weigh heavily upon consumers. On the other hand, one cannot help thinking that Great Britain would benefit by having some weapon with which she would be able to retaliate when unfairly treated by a foreign country. But it must not be forgotten that England maintains a remarkable position in the world's commerce, notwithstanding the developments of Germany and the United States. The question is, how long will she be able to do so?

"Germany is, of course, a keen commercial rival; but far more serious than the competition in trade is the rivalry of building Dreadnoughts. The manner in which armaments are being piled up is unfortunate. An efficient navy for Great Britain is absolutely essential, but in introducing the budget in the house of commons recently the chancellor of the exchequer pointed to the enormous growth in annual expenditure on the part of England. And the millions that are required for battleships hinder social reforms, and a visitor from the colonies to Great Britain experiences a pang when he observes some of the social conditions."

"We must not forget that England is an old country, and it is difficult to break away from ancient traditions. Revolutions are not popular. The national temperament is not conducive to pulling up the constitution by the roots, and it is impossible not to admire the spirit of conservatism and patience which one observes, and to applaud the efficiency of local government such as that which has made London a beautiful city with its expensive parks and open places. The efficiency of local administration is very marked in all the great towns in the United Kingdom.

"Referring to London and social conditions, there is probably no city in the world so wealthy and so fascinating. At the same time, it may be said there is no city presenting more terrible contrasts. At night may be witnessed on one hand the rich glow of wealth and on the other the misery of poverty. I know of nothing more depressing than a stroll along the Thames Embankment—one of the finest thoroughfares in London—at night. At one end are the Houses of Parliament. At the other, the entrance to the city, where, in a small radius, financial undertakings affecting the whole world are carried through. On one side the brilliantly illuminated hotels, and a few feet away on the other side, are poor wretches without a home, sleeping on the pathway by the side of the river.

"I do not wish to be understood that England is not still great. It is a country with much more vitality than we sometimes imagine. But her social problems afford a lesson to a new country and one is to see that youth is properly trained.

Opportunities Lacking

"I always leave England with the impression that there are thousands of men who are not doing themselves justice—men who suffer through lack of opportunity. If only in their youth they had sought success in a country like Canada, how different might have been their position! I am afraid that in England there has been too great a respect for the black coat and too little appreciation of the dignity of labor.

"But reformers are moving in the old country, and I have no doubt remedies will be found for existing evils. One remedy would be to give more of Britain's sons an opportunity in this country. I found in some parts critics of our immigration regulations, and there are those who think them too rigid. This is a question which our immigration department should certainly handle very carefully.

Suffragette Demonstration

"And now a remark upon a new political force that is rising in the old country—the suffragettes. I am not one of those who agree with the militant methods that some of them have adopted. But they are a large and growing band. I witnessed a most remarkable demonstration a few days before I left London. It was a procession of women of all classes of the community on their way to Hyde Park—one of the great open spaces in London. There were ladies of wealth, women educated at universities, as well as those of the working classes. They marched in thousands. It was an artistic and most orderly procession. Years may elapse before the women of England get the parliamentary vote, but there is not the slightest doubt that they who are claiming it include some of the brightest and most intelligent women in the country. And I have come to the conclusion that the English woman is not easily beaten."
