UPRIGHT PIANOS

$4.00 A MONTH

A good way of buying a piano, if you do not feel like fully deducing now, is to rent one for six months and then buy it. You can come here and choose a new piano, assuming no responsibility beyond giving the trifling sum agreed upon—$4.85, or $8. You can keep it as long as you wish, and should you decide to purchase after a few months, we will allow from the price all the rent paid.

Sometimes one publication of a "To Let" adv. is enough—sometimes it is half enough. Again it might need even more persistence—but, the important fact is that it WILL find the tenant.

No to use the classified ads. is to remain "old-fashioned" in a

You Should Advertise.

Before you close up on a deal stop, reflect, consider.
Perhaps you did not yet appeal to the highest bidder.
Another man might yet be ahead With more cash behind him, And a business chance advertised with help from this firm.

Here is a way for you to earn plenty of side money during your spare moments at home.

Every day hundreds of people advertise in the Want Columns of the Sun and Star. They need some one to do a little extra work for them. For instance—such work as addressing envelopes, writing short stories, knitting or sewing.
These people will pay you well for your services. Why not take this opportunity of making extra money during your parent moments? It certainly will come in handy. Don't

Synopsis of Canadian North- west Land Regulations

Any person who is the sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter-section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Department of the Interior, or at the local land office. Entry by proxy may be made at an agency, on certain conditions, by father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Duties—Six months residence upon cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres solely owned and occupied by him or by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $200 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate forty acres and erect a house worth $200.00.

INSINCERITY.

"Our civilization demands a greater or less degree of mendacity," remarked the abstruse person. "We are constantly encountering some empty phrase, some conventional remark, which is absolutely devoid of sincerity."

"That's right," answered the book agent. "That's perfectly true. I am reminded of it every time I walk up to the front step where there is a doormat with the word 'welcome' on it."

TYPHOID AT COBALT.

COBALT, Ont., Sept. 23.—The typhoid situation here is still serious, and so far as the cases entering the hospital from the mines are concerned, there appears to be no sign of improvement.
Eighteen new cases have been admitted during the past two days and the hospital here has wired for nine additional nurses.

SHOT HIS SQUAW: SAYS IT WAS AN ACCIDENT.

KENORA, Ont., Sept. 23.—The police have captured the Indian who shot his squaw near here on the 11th inst. The Indian says the shooting was accidental as he mistook the woman for a bear.
The remainder of his tale he added it was a pure case of "m. r.," jealousy being the motive.

KNOW-THIS WAY.

"Do you believe everything your husband tells you?"
"Yes, except his promise to weed the garden when he comes home from work."

THE LAUGHTER OF LIFE

A NOVEL AND A VERY INTERESTING ONE.

Copyright 1903 By MARIA ALBANESI

Drusilla laughed at him.
"That is the most dull, commonplace remark I have ever heard. I take back my first assertion. I don't believe you are clever, Mr. Keston." He touched the faded velvet leaves with a hand that was not quite steady.
"I arrived at that conclusion a long time ago."

Drusilla looked at him without realizing that he was there, without hearing distinctly what he said.
"I have a good mind to take her up to town," she said slowly. "Beth is in such a groove down here. Yes, that is a splendid idea. I'll rush her round, I won't give her time to sit down and think about anything. If it weren't for this town in town for Christmas."

"I do think," said Brian Keston, bluntly, "that Miss Heronworth would be the better of a little change."

"Why didn't you say that before?" asked Drusilla crossly, but the next moment she was smiling. "Look here," she said, "you've got to help me. I shall bustle Beth away as fast as I can. You'll back me up, won't you?" She left the fireplace and walked across to the desk where he was standing, and stood a moment looking down on the old manuscript—letters, they were, for the most part—which he had been affixing to the cloth-covered slopes.

"To think," said Drusilla, "that those bits of writing meant living thoughts and that hundreds of years ago people could care and feel just as we care and feel! Life is a queer thing. I am not sure that I like to look at these old old papers. They make one think too much."

She walked to the window, glanced out, came back again, and then stood looking at Brian Keston rather intently.

The riding attire gave her the effect of greater height.

Keston by this time had grown into the trick of finding some fresh suggestion of charm and beauty in every new aspect of this girl. As he felt her eyes studying him he looked up, coloring hotly, and just as he was nervously drumming his fingers on the mantelpiece.

"I was trying to see if you were one little bit like your mother. I have not seen her herself, you know, but I saw her picture when I was staying with Jim's people. His sisters knew her well. I don't see the faintest resemblance."

"There is no resemblance," said Keston coldly.

"Perhaps you are like what your father was," said Drusilla.

"I wish I were," he answered, and then he turned away.

He came back to the desk with a fresh batch of papers in his hand, and opening a fresh section of the glass cover, began carefully to pin these papers, and to place a heading and a number over each.

If he turned and looked at Drusilla in this moment he would have seen that tears had gathered in her eyes, but he was not looking at her, and she saw that his usually steady hand was trembling. She put out one of hers, and laid it on his just for an instant.

"No," she said, "you shan't tell me anything. I am an intrusive brute."

Keston drew back from her light touch, paused nearly a moment, and then said, almost calmly:

"On the contrary, I think it is very good of you to interest yourself in me.
There is very little to tell. The first thing that I can remember was the sound of my father's voice, and the joy that always came to me when I realized that he was in the house. I don't know how it happened—but I flashed back from her photograph she had looked at when she had been in Yorkshire, and she understood."

"But he sent me such a little chap," said Brian Keston, "because he knew that I had to be hardened; and when I was there I worked with one idea in my mind—to make myself possible so that I could help him. Even then I realized how up to the neck he was in the hardships, the sordid struggles, of a professional literary life. I wanted to make Mr. Keston, because he knew that he was, and as I listened, I couldn't help crying."

A curious expression flashed across Brian Heronworth's face. If that expression had been put into words, it would have started Drusilla. Not for an instant did the girl imagine that this simple statement of a simple fact was a pang—almost a jealous one—through Drusilla's heart. Indeed Drusilla's next words proved how very true she was from even imagining how precious was all that happened to Brian Keston in her sister's eyes.

"I suppose he has spoken to you—"

CHAPTER XI.

It was a fact as Drusilla would put it, "patent to the meanest intelligence," that Mrs. Lingfield was by no means pleased to see her niece. She gave them the coldest greeting, and her manner was so ill-tempered to the point of chill even Drusilla's unfailing light-heartedness.

Constance Lingfield did her best to make her niece feel that her lack of cordiality; her efforts were not successful, however.

"But what is one?" said Drusilla to herself, "among so many? I have often called Aunt Edith a host in herself, and tonight I realize how true this is."

Mrs. Lingfield was very firm in her refusal to permit either Drusilla or Drusilla to see her husband.

"Edmund must not be disturbed," she said. "He has been very unwell for more than a week, and has a long tiring journey in front of him, and he needs a good night's rest. If he knows that you are here he will insist seeing you, and then he will get excited."

At this Drusilla lost her patience a little.

"We have come to town on purpose to see Uncle Edmund," she said, and I don't believe we should excite him. Why should we excite him? We are not a circus."

Drusilla had made no protest, but as Mrs. Lingfield got up and went out of the room in lofty indignation apparently at Drusilla's speech she followed her in her halting fashion.

The moment Drusilla and her cousin were alone, Mrs. Lingfield exclaimed:
"How ill Drusilla looks!"

"To her surprise, Drusilla shook her by her two shoulders and asked her violently, then she kissed her."
