Every life lived and every work done has somewhere its sufficient explanation. God has never yet permitted an accident in His world. Every deed has Its pedigree. So much producing energy in the cause means so much energy in the effect. There is no such thing as luck. Every life has its pedigree. Young men are so apt to think they wait for their chance. They see some one do easily the thing he undertakes, and they leap to the belief that there is some trick about it. If they momentum is to the rifle ball. A boy only had the trick they could do it, also. Such young men need to be informed. The man who succeeds today in business, scholarship or politics succeeds because he knows how, and he knows how because he has learned how. He who does not know how is which I use as the equivalent for the foreordained to failure. There is no more important question the young individual nor the world will be saved man can ask himself than how he can by its furnishings.
